The Board of Instruction will be composed of able and experienced Teachers and Lecturers and will include Members of the Faculty of the Normal School, and of other literary institutions of the State.

LOCAL COMMITTEES.

It is desirable that a committee of active friends of the cause should be immediately appointed in each place where an Institute is to be held, with whom the undersigned may confer, and who may materially aid in making the necessary local arrangements for the successful prosecution of the enterprise.

LECTURES AND INSTRUCTIONS

FREE.

All the expense which Teachers and others attending the Institutes will need to incur, will be for board, which in some instances I am assured will be at considerably reduced rates, and especially for ladies, of which due notice will be given by the Local Committee; or, at least, information may be had touching the matter by application to them.

IRA MAYHEW.

Sup't of Public Instruction.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns. Mous de Lains and Bureges. Lawns, Shawls, &c.

A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish.

Blank and Barred Muslins. Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores.

Stoves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale. 68aa.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES.

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST.

J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Nail-roads, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused.

He has also on hand a small assortment of Clocks, Watches, Jewelry, &c.

Saint James, June 19th, 1855. 70a90*

CORRESPONDENCE.

Saint James, June 28th, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER:—In my last I expected to have finished up my narrative to the time of Joseph's death, but the limits I had prescribed myself for writing would not permit. Upon my arrival at the pines we set about arranging our lumbering operations so as to leave a man in charge to carry on the work, and Wight and myself to go to Nauvoo, as before agreed upon by the council, (of fifty princes of the kingdom.)

Some time towards the last of April, 1844, we (Lyman Wight, myself and families) arrived in Nauvoo. Soon after this Woodworth returned from Texas. The council convened to hear his report. It was altogether as we could wish it. On the part of the church there were commissioners appointed to meet the Texan Congress, to sanction or ratify the said treaty, partly entered into by our minister and the Texan Cabinet. A. W. Brown, Lucien Woodworth and myself were the commissioners appointed to meet the Texan Congress, and upon the consummation of the treaty Wight and myself were to locate the Black River lumber company on the newly acquired territory, and do such other things as might be necessary in the premises, and report to the council of the kingdom.

It was further determined in council that all the elders should set out on missions to all the States, get up electoral tickets, and do everything in our power to have Joseph elected President, and if we succeeded in making a majority of the voters converts to our faith and elected Joseph President, in such an event the dominion of the kingdom would be forever established in the United States. And if not successful, we could but fall back on Texas, and be a kingdom notwithstanding.

It was thought and urged by the council that so great an undertaking would require, in order to ensure success, the entire and united effort of all the official members of the church. And accordingly, on the sixth of May, I started to Kentucky, and Lyman to the eastern States; and at no period since the organization of the church had there been half so many elders in the vineyard, in proportion to the number of members in the church.

I preached and electioneered alternately. When I had preaching meetings, as a general thing we had crowded houses, and our prospects bid fair for the accomplishment of a great work in each point of view, and of reaping an abundant harvest as fruits of our ministerial labors. All Kentucky was in a high state of political excitement, as it was just before their general election, which was to come off on the first Monday in August, having barbecues in the different neighborhoods, (of that densely populated country) for the express purpose of giving the candidates an opportunity of addressing the citizens. These were the latter end of the days of political folly; such as having log cabin exhibitions, and tree raccoons at the top of long poles set up for that purpose, &c.

At one of those meetings, while one of the candidates was speaking, I was rather on the outskirts of the immense crowd reading to a few of my old acquaintances Joseph Smith's views of the poverty and policy of government. One of my old neighbors, and a relative by marriage, brought up a Missourian with him, and, addressing me, said, here is a man that knows all about the enormities committed by the Mormons in Missouri. Without a moment's pause I answered, yes, I have no doubt of it, and I believe I recognize in him one of those murderers who shot a little Mormon boy in the blacksmith's shop, under the bellows. Upon which the fellow struck off, and I saw no more of him.

Not so however with my old neighbor and relative. Now, said he, I have a matter to tell you as a friend, that if you do not leave this country and put a stop to preaching your religious views and political Mormonism, the negroes are employed to hang you to an apple tree. I told him that I had enough of his hollow friendship, and if I could believe that there was courage enough among such intolerant scamps, I would hire a house and hold forth three months to give them an opportunity of carrying out their threat.

By this time quite a crowd had collected around us, even more apparently than around the candidate that was then on the stand. I got on a large stump, and commenced reading aloud Joseph's views on the powers and policy of government, and backed it up with a short speech, at the end of which I was loudly and repeatedly cheered; and a crowd bore me off about two miles to a Mr. Smith's tavern, where they had a late dinner prepared for my benefit, all declaring that I should not partake of the barbecue prepared for the candidate who addressed the log cabin meeting; that I was worthy of better respect.

After dinner I rode to the place where I was then making my home, several gentlemen accompanying me. In ten or twelve days after I went about 25 miles into Mercer county, Ky., to fill some engagements, where I preached to large collections of people, so that we resorted to groves for the convenience of room. About this time we saw notices in the newspapers that there was civil war in Nauvoo. And on the morning of the 28th of June, 1844, I had a dream or vision in an upper room in the house of a Mr. Sanders, where I then lodged with brother Thomas Edwards. It took place after sunrise.

I was lying on my bed, and suddenly Joseph Smith appeared to me, saying, God bless you, brother Miller. The mob broke in upon us in Carthage jail, and killed brother Hyrum and myself. I was delivered up by the brethren as a lamb for the slaughter. You ought not to have left me. If you had stayed with me, I would have been given up. I answered, but you sent me. I know I did, but you ought not to have gone; and approaching me, said, God bless you forever and ever, making as though he was about to embrace me, and in the act of extending my arms to return the embrace the vision fled, and I found myself standing on the floor in the middle of the room. Brother Edwards, roused from his slumbers, called to me, what is the matter, brother Miller? who are you talking to? I requested him to rise and dress himself, and for us to take our morning walk, as was our custom.

Whilst on my walk I related to brother Edwards my vision; told him my mission was filled, for my firm belief was that Joseph was dead. Brother Edwards told me that I had preached too much, and my mind was somewhat deranged, and I must not think of going home until our present appointments were filled, the last week hence. And the rumors of trouble at Nauvoo he did not believe a word in. I told him if I stayed, he would have to do the preaching.

On the day that we filled our last appointment, we started for home. On passing a tavern, the landlord walked on his porch, addressing us, said, are you the gentlemen that preached at the school-house to-day? We said yes. He said, walk in, gentlemen, and refresh yourselves, handing us some ice water, and at the same time handing us a newspaper, said, you will find an article that may be of interest to you. We read an extract from the Warsaw Signal, giving an account of Joseph and Hyrum Smith's death. After reading we started on. Brother Edwards being an excitable man, was wholly unmanly, and insisted on an immediate separation, as traveling together might endanger our lives, and broke off from me as one distracted, and I did not see any more of him until I saw him in Nauvoo, four weeks afterwards.

On my arrival in Nauvoo I visited elder John Taylor, of the quorum of the Apostles, who was sick of his wounds received in Carthage jail, at the time of Joseph's death. Dr. Willard Richards was there, and after a few remarks in regard to the mob, I asked him who Joseph had left to succeed him in the prophetic office. He replied all was right; that there were sealed documents left, which would be opened when the twelve Apostles should get home that would settle all these matters. Sidney Rigdon had already returned from Pittsburgh, (where he was sent before Joseph's death,) and had made some moves as a leader of the people, and from hints and innuendoes that I heard frequently I was induced to believe that Joseph had designated his son to succeed him in the prophetic office, and on this belief I rested.

On the return of the Twelve there was a public meeting called—the Apostles and Sidney Rigdon on the stand—Brigham Young acting as principal speaker. Sidney urged his pretensions as a kind of guardian, or temporary leader. Young made a long and loud harangue, and as I had always took him to be a blunderbuss in speaking, and on this occasion to me apparently more so, for the life of me I could not see any point in the course of his remarks, than to overturn Sidney Rigdon's pretensions. As this meeting was a pretty general Conference of the Elders, the Twelve assuming a temporary leadership, which was generally conceded to them, as they were the quorum next in authority to the prophet and presidency of the whole church, N. K. Whitney and myself were put in nomination as trustees in trust for the church, instead of Joseph Smith, deceased, and were voted in by acclamation, and acknowledged as such by all present.

There was a good deal of speaking from the stand. The principal however was said by Brigham Young. I must confess that all the proceedings at this time was anarchy and boisterous confusion, as it appeared to me, and I felt indeed as one who had lost a friend. I had no one in whom I could implicitly confide in all things, as he to whom I sought in all times of trouble for counsel and advice was dead. Oh! who can appreciate my (then) feelings? Let me be excused from saying more on this painful subject.

Subsequent to these times of intense excitement I had frequent attempts at conversation with Brigham Young and H. C. Kimball in regard to Joseph's leaving one to succeed him in the prophetic office, and in all my attempts to ascertain the desired truth as to that personage, I was invariably met with the inuendo, stop, or hush, brother Miller, let there be nothing said in regard to this matter, or we will have little Joseph killed as his father was, inferring indirectly that Joseph Smith had appointed his son Joseph to succeed him in the prophetic office; and I believe this impression was not alone left on my mind, but on the brethren in general, and remains with many until this day.

Lyman Wight became disaffected with his brethren of the Twelve. The man left in charge of the mills in the pinery sold out possession of the whole concern, (the mills being on Indian land possession was the best title,) for a few hundred thousand feet of pine lumber. Those mills and appurtenances, worth at least $20,000, thus passed out of our hands for a mere trifle, by the act of an indiscreet man.

He brought part of the lumber to Nauvoo, and all the company that had been engaged in the pineries. Lyman, ever fond of authority, placed himself at the head of this company. From the stand that Joseph had laid out a work that would take twenty years to accomplish, Lyman averred that he would commence his work then, and solicited me to take my place and go with him to locate the Black River Company.

I told Lyman there was a way to do all things right, and we would get Woodworth and Brown, and get the authorities together and clothe ourselves with the necessary papers, and proceed to meet the Texan Congress, as before Joseph's death agreed upon. Woodworth and myself waited on Brigham, requesting him to convene the authorities that the proper papers might be made out, so that we could be able to complete the unfinished negotiation of the treaty for the territory mentioned in my former letters. And to my utter astonishment, Brigham refused having anything to do in the matter; that he had, no faith in it, and would do nothing to raise means for our outfit or expenses. Thus all hopes cut off to establish dominion of the kingdom, at a time that there seemed to be a crisis, and I verily believed all that we had concerted in council might so easily be accomplished, I was really cast down and dejected.

Lyman had a conference with Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball, and they advised him to go up the river to Prairie LaCrosse, (as I afterwards heard,) and he did so. About this time James Emmet raised a company, (as he had received a mission to go among the Indians by appointment of Joseph and sanction of the council,) and he also set off. I thought frequently to myself, Oh! Lord, when will miracle cease! Sorrow and gloom were not frequent attendants on my midnight hours.

The work on the Temple was vigorously prosecuted, and that of the Nauvoo House resumed. Much music and banqueting indulged in, and other pleasure parties. Thus matters went on through the fall and winter, except a little display of mobocracy. It was published at the beginning of September in the counties round about that a general wolf hunt would come off a month or two hence, to be limited to Hancock county. It was understood by Mormons and all others that it was really to make a foray upon the Mormons. Gov. Thos. Ford being an old acquaintance of mine, I wrote to him touching the matter, and in reply he assured me that he would be in Hancock county with a battalion of soldiers, and break up the wolf hunt. Accordingly he came, Gen. John J. Harding in command, (killed in the Mexican war.)

On the day of their arrival in Nauvoo, the legion had their fall training, and they passed review before the Governor. He had over four hundred men and two cannon, and requested me to show his Quarter Master a suitable camping ground below the city, and also provide him two scows to transport his cannon and artillery to Warsaw, as he intended to surprise that hot bed of mobocracy by land and water before daylight. I showed them their quarters, two miles below the city, and then set out to procure the scows. I got some men to take the two scows down, and rode down to announce to Gen. Harding the safe delivery of the scows there, after dark. On getting to the lines of their camp, (or within ten paces,) I was met by a sentinel inquiring my business, (I had been so busy that I had not taken off my uniform.) I told the sentinel that I wanted an interview with the officer of the night. He was immediately called for, and came.

I told him to inform Gov. Ford and Gen. Harding that I had brought the boats to transport their cannon, and I wished a conference with them. The officer bowed, and said, who shall I say requires their presence? I told him Miller. In reply he said, shall I say Gen. Miller, of the (taking off his cap) First Cohort of the Nauvoo Legion? I replied, if you please. And he forthwith went on his errand, (all this time the battalion was drawn up, forming a hollow square.) The officer of the guard soon returned, presenting the respects of Gov. Ford and Gen. Harding; that they would wait on me in a few minutes; that they were just in the act of exercising their command a little in firing a few rounds, to see how they would carry themselves in case they might come in contact with the mob.

Woodworth had brought me down in a buggy, and I alighted and took my station in the line of the sentinel's beat, as he walked back and forth, and immediately the firing commenced. I heard the command given, elevate your guns, but it seemed to me that a constant blaze of fire the greater extent of the line was directed right at me; and as the sentinel got near the place I stood a shot struck him, and he fell, crying aloud I am dead. I took him up and carried him within the lines, and called for a surgeon. While he was coming I examined the wound, finding the ball had passed in on the right hip bone, and ranging back passing out through the spine. The surgeon came, and I assisted in conveying the wounded man to the hospital tent. The man died.

I inquired for Ford and Harding, and was answered that they could not tell where they were. Every thing seemed to indicate alarm and confusion. I spoke aloud that I believed the whole movement was intended to kill me, so as to have it said that it was done by accident. I was almost determined in my mind to bring down my cohort and wipe the whole tribe of dogs out of existence. No commissioned officer could be found. And after uttering a few formal blessings on the unmanly cowardly dogs, I got in my buggy, and Woodworth and myself returned to the city. The whole force of the renowned Gov. Ford soon decamped, bearing with them the trophies of their late victory. We had no mob movements the residue of this year. All other things about as they had been.

From the month of January, 1845, until June we had very little disturbance from our foes, but they were quite vociferous in threats. Col. Denning, who had espoused the side of the Mormons, and being the acting Sheriff of Hancock county, got into a rencounter with doctor Marshall, Clerk of the County Commission's Court, who was a violent Anti-Mormon. Marshall made the assault, and Denning drew his revolver and shot Marshall dead on the spot. Denning was held to bail, but before his trial came on he died of fever, and Jacob B. Backenstos was elected in his stead. He was also favorable to the Mormons.

The excitement now became very great, all taking sides. Those that were opposed to the Mormons were called Anti-Mormons, and the friendly portion were called Jack Mormons. The latter part of the summer there was a mob of three hundred collected. They encamped near Warsaw, at a place called Green Plains, and began their forays on the Mormons by burning houses, barns, stacks and other deeds of violence. They continued their marauding, occasionally killing, until over two hundred houses were burnt, together with most of the small grain. I went in person to Springfield to see Gov. Ford. I rode night and day. Ford told me to stand in our own defence, but not make an offensive war.

On my return Backenstos set about restoring law and order, but was driven before the mob about eighteen miles, with a view of killing him. Just at the moment of being overtaken by the mob, O. P. Rockwell and J. Reding met him, who were going as a guard to bring a family to Nauvoo that had been burned out, and he called on them in the name of the people of the State to defend him against those murderers, (the pursuing mob, ten in number, and headed by Francis Worell, one of Joseph's assassins.) Worell leveled his gun to shoot, when, at the instant, the Sheriff commanded Rockwell to shoot which he did, and felled Worell to the ground by passing a ball through his heart, exclaiming that he was good for that crowd, (he was armed with a fifteen shooter.) They all fled precipitately, and Backenstos came up to Nauvoo to raise a posse compunctus to assist him in restoring law and order.

But B. Young would not agree to let a force go from the city, until he should have failed in all the county. About this time I went to Carthage to sell some county orders. I went in a buggy, and had my wife and a female friend of hers with me. While trading my county orders for dry goods an officer stepped up and arrested me on a charge of treason against the State, telling me in a low voice that there was a mob there of forty men, and their design was to commit me to jail and kill me that night, and told me not to betray him. I went into court, leaving my wife and her friend sitting in the buggy. The room was crowded, but room was made for me. Two lawyers were prosecuting, viz., Backman and Hopkins. They demanded of the court a mittimus to be made out, and the crime charged not being a bailable offence, I must therefore go to jail.

I told the court that my wife was sick, and to send a guard with me until I could take her home, and I would forthwith return and await the decision of the court. This was however not agreed to. The mittimus was ordered. I arose, opening my coat, saying, that I had made the roads and killed the snakes in the country, and must needs be an old citizen; further, that all Carthage could not put me in jail; that they were a set of almost still-born and white-livered dogs, and by the God of Moses, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob I was going home, and none could hinder. Hereupon drawing my large knife and revolver, making for the door; at which they said, consider yourself in bonds under a verbal recognizance of five hundred dollars, to be made of your goods and chattels, and to be here a week from this day. I went out, they making room for me to pass, and home I went. I have frequently thought it a miracle that they let me go.

Sheriff Backenstos got no help from any part of the county, as the Jack Mormons feared they would share the same fate of the Mormons, in case they assisted the Sheriff in restoring law and order. And he was again forced to flee to Nauvoo for protection, the mob declaring that they would burn his house and destroy his property. Brigham Young had at the time of the Sheriff's return a council assembled to consult on some plan of safety. Backenstos came into the council, stating the danger he was in, and that he must have help from Nauvoo, as he could not get it elsewhere; and he wanted men at that instant to bring his family out of Carthage that night.

Brigham Young said that men could not be got in readiness in one hour, as it was not over that until sundown. I replied they could. He said will you do it? I told him I would try, and started out of the council room, and by the setting of the sun I was ready with one hundred and four choice men, who, I had no doubt, would have attempted the taking of the loads out of cannon, if men were standing with lighted matches to touch them off, if I would command it.

We forthwith set out for Carthage, to bring to Nauvoo the Sheriff's family, and to stop the burning of houses, which was then going on from day to day. On our approach to Carthage we were fired on, but they immediately fled before us. We made no stop until I drew up my command ready for action in front of the Sheriff's house.

About this time I discovered lighted torches passing in various directions. I apprehended that they intended to burn their own houses and lay it to the Mormons, in order to raise a greater excitement against us, if possible. I sent men all over the village, and had every man arrested and brought before me. I told them I had discovered from their movements that they intended to burn their own houses, and charge it on the Mormon posse, that were then acting under the directions of the Sheriff. I assured them that if a house was burned then or after my leaving, I would put the place to the sword without discrimination.

While these things were going on without, the Sheriff was preparing his family for a move to Nauvoo. We soon started, taking the road to Warsaw, until we came to the road leading from Bear Creek settlement to Nauvoo. Here I detailed six men as a guard and conductors to take the Sheriff's family to Nauvoo, and Backenstos, in company with us, took the road to Bear Creek settlement to arrest the house burners, who were reported to be there carrying out the work of destruction. By this time it was near day break.

When we got to Sidney A. Knowlton's (a Mormon) we bought grain for our horses, and food for ourselves, and called a halt to feed, and for the men to feed and refresh themselves. While eating our breakfast a messenger came to let us know that the work of burning was going on.

Sheriff Backenstos gave orders to prepare for a march, and that he would go ahead with one division of my command, under the command of Col. John D. Parker, and I might bring up the rear. There was no time lost, as all hands were eager to avenge the wrongs of their suffering brethren. Col. Parker's division set out, headed by Backenstos, and I soon followed. I had not proceeded far until Backenstos rode up to me, saying, do you see those smokes? pointing about two or three miles off to our left. On my answering yes, he added, saying, go and rout them, and I will go ahead with Col. Parker and cut off their retreat.

We all set off at full speed. I approached the house burners under cover of a narrow skirt of woods, wholly unperceived till within a hundred paces of them. I commanded them in the name of the people of the State to surrender. They mounted their horses and put off at full speed. I had some difficulty in crossing a ravine, which gave the enemy about a fourth of a mile the start of us.

I ordered a charge, telling the men to have no regard to order, for the fastest horses to go ahead and bring on the action, and all the others to go at the top of their speed, until they should come up with the advance, and then fall into line. We had a race of three miles on the even prairie, when four of our best horses overtook the enemy and fired on them, killing one man on the spot, and two others that fell from their horses and crawled into a cornfield near at hand, and there died.

In a minute there was over twenty horses running through the prairie, saddled and bridled, to be sure, but no riders on them; the men having dismounted and fled through the corn field, and all the others escaping on their horses into the woods near by. Thus a victory was won by firing three guns, which resulted in the killing of three of the house burners. I formed my squadron and made them a short address, rather by way of command. By this time Backenstos and Col. Parker came up, who were to have cut off the enemy's retreat. I ordered them to form into line on the left, and then called a council of the officers of my command, to consult on such things as should be thought best to do.

It was proposed by Backenstos that we should go direct to Nauvoo and get an additional force, and return and rout the house burners in their camp, numbering three hundred, then a mile from us. As we were under the Sheriff's control, of course we all agreed to his proposal, and immediately set out for Nauvoo, where we arrived a little after dark, having marched sixty-five miles in twenty-six hours.

On our getting to Nauvoo I learned that a force of something over a hundred, under command of Col. Markham, had on that morning been sent to reinforce me. Sheriff Backenstos called on me early the succeeding morning, to make ready for a return to Green Plains. In a short time we took up the line of march, and at 4 o'clock of the same day we got to Col. S. Markham's camp, near thirty miles from Nauvoo. The same night I sent two discreet men to spy out the situation of the enemy's camp. They returned with all the facts relative to their encampment and intentions.

They were in two bodies, one-fourth of a mile apart, in the woods, on the side of a large corn field. They were three hundred in number, and intended to remain in camp until they could be reinforced by men from Missouri, and the counties round about. I instantly insisted on Backenstos sending a despatch to Brigham Young to send two pieces of artillery and four hundred men; to send one company by water to scuttle all the boats and skiffs from Nauvoo to LaGrange, and take their station opposite Tulley, in Missouri; another company at Warsaw, another opposite Keokuk, thus securing all the crossings of the Mississippi river below Nauvoo, and the residue of the men and the cannon come as a reserve to back us up; and our plan was to lay ambuscades on all the roads leading from the enemy's camp, and make two divisions of the remaining force, and to attack the camps of the enemy from the side of the corn field, where they kept no guard, and put them to the sword just at the break of day of the second morning, and by carrying the plan into effect we should be forever clear of mobs.

The Sheriff sent the despatch, with the plan of operations, by O. P. Rockwell, the same night, so as to have every one in the place by the time fixed on for the attack. We got no tidings, until two days after, Rockwell returned with a letter from Young, stating that he had no doubt of the success of the plan concerted to destroy the mob, but we might in the mean time have many brethren killed, and withal bring upon us all the surrounding States. He assured Backenstos that in a day or two the men and cannon would be sent down to our camp, to assist us in making arrests.

Before the next day after this all the mob took flight, (likely at the approach of the reinforcement,) and they all crossed the Mississippi, and encamped on the Missouri side. On the arrival of our reinforcement, Backenstos marched us to Warsaw, then to Carthage, and encamped us on the Court House square, and detailing strong guards, and posting them in various parts of the county, and doing such other things as he thought the peace of the people required.

Such was the state of affairs when Gov. Ford and Gen. J. J. Harding arrived with a strong military force into Hancock county, disarmed the Sheriff's posse compunctus, arrested Backenstos for the killing of Worell, and put the county under martial law. Sheriff Backenstos was taken to Quincy, and tried before Judge Purple, and put under bonds of $3,000 to appear at the next term of the court. The mob that fled to Missouri, upon the introduction of the Governor's military force, took courage, and re-crossed the Mississippi river, and commenced depredations, leaving us in a worse condition than we had at any time been since the church had been in the State.

About this time Brigham Young proposed leaving the United States, that if the Mormons were to remain in peace, that he would leave the State, taking with him all the official members, and this exodus should begin before the springing of the grass in the ensuing spring. The remainder of the fall was taken up in negotiations with the people who wished us out of the country. From this time forward all was hurry and bustle, active preparations going on for the early exodus of the Saints from the city that the God of heaven had chosen to establish them in righteousness, if they would but keep his commandments.

Most truly and sincerely,
GEORGE MILLER.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 11.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, SEP. 13, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 73.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Saint James, July 1, '55.

DEAR BROTHER:—In my last communication I closed my narrative with the discharge of the Sheriff's posse, and his arrest for the killing of Francis Worrell.

The Sheriff being fully aware of the prejudice of the people of Hancock against him for the killing of the murderer Worrell, he did not deem it safe to be tried on the charge of murder in Hancock county, therefore changed the venue to Peoria county, and was there acquitted honorably.

In the course of the winters of 1845 and 1846, at the instance of Brigham Young, H. C. Kimball and Willard Richards, and others of the quorum of the Twelve, it was agreed upon by them in council that brethren who had been faithful in paying tithing, and could produce the proper vouchers that they have paid a full tithe of all their property, should receive an endowment of patriarchal priesthood, under the hands of the twelve Apostles, so soon as the upper room of the Temple could be fitted therefor, and tithing gatherers were sent in every direction. Consequently there was an immense sum of money and property paid in, and the rooms in the Temple were fitted up, and the promised endowment began in the latter part of December, or thereabouts, and was continued from day to day until in February, 1846.

It is not my design to give in detail the things that transpired during the continuance of the exciting times from the death of Joseph Smith to the beginning of the exodus of the Saints, for it would really take more time to write them than I can at this time devote to the subject. But as many things are inseparably connected with my history, I cannot well abridge this work so as to leave them out.

Brigham Young and myself had frequent sparrings as it respected the legitimate authority to lead the church, as I always conceived the leadership of the Twelve nothing but a usurpation of authority, that could not under any circumstances be exercised rightfully by any quorum of the church. And without the prophet at their head, they could not enter upon the duties of their calling. Therefore, no prophet, no church.

Brigham on a certain occasion, in the upper room of the Temple, urged emphatically, (before the principal official members of the church and their wives there assembled to hear instruction,) that so long as one man remained on earth holding priesthood the kingdom of God would be borne off triumphant in all the nations of the earth, until the coming of Jesus Christ; and in the event of the Apostles being killed, or otherwise die, they would be succeeded by the quorums of the Seventies, (then thirty-three quorums,) and by gradation down to the Deacons; each in their time and order, until the winding up of the present dispensation.

After he had finished his teachings, I asked leave, and obtained the floor. On rising I told them that I differed in opinion with the President of the quorum of the Twelve; that I did not so understand the revelation of God's law; that I so understood the law that no quorum, from that of the Twelve, in regular gradation to High Priests, Seventies, Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons could rightfully exercise any authority in the government of God's church and kingdom, except under the legitimate head of the church, viz., the Prophet, Seer and Revelator, of the church; that all acts of the several quorums were invalid, unless so directed.

I considered the order of God's kingdom, in its full organization, to be, a Prophet at the head, with his home ministry, consisting of a High Council, chosen from among the High Priests after the order of Melchisedec, High Priests, Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons, and amenable to the Prophet, the Chief Shepherd of the flock; the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, under the direction of the Chief Shepherd, of equal authority as a traveling High Council, with the Seventies to help them; whose duty is to open the gospel to the nations, and have jurisdiction on all the face of the earth.

And, furthermore, the order taught by the President of the Apostles must certainly be erroneous, unless the order and priesthood of God's kingdom had been abrogated, and another established instead thereof. The difficulty (or rather breach) between Brigham Young and myself grew wider daily, and I was told, confidentially, by Lyman Clark Whitney that there had been a plan laid by Brigham and Hosea Stout to contrive a row to take place in the Temple, and have me called in to appease the rowdies, (as I was then superintending the boring of some cannon in the ground room of the Temple,) and Stout was to be there in readiness to kill me. The row was raised, and I was called in to appease the strife, but was not killed.

I bore all this, and more too, with patience, as I was yet laboring under the delusion that Joseph Smith, the younger, was really prophet, and Brigham, by sufferance, was acting as temporary leader. After many plans proposed for the sake of order in traveling, finally, on the 6th day of February, 1846, there were as many families started west for California as could conveniently ferry their wagons and effects over the Mississippi River, and I among them. We went eight miles out into Iowa, and camped on a stream called Sugar Creek. Orders having been issued by Brigham Young for all hands that could be ready to start west to be moving.

We remained in this camp until the 4th of March, when orders were again issued to move forward. We went on sixteen miles further, and camped between Farmington and Boneparte, on the Des Moines River.

While we were encamped on Sugar Creek there was scarce a night without a council, and quite as many changes of plans as councils. At one of those councils (which were usually held in the night) Howard Egan came to my tent and called me aside for a private talk. He asked me if I was going to cross the bridge to the council tent that night. I told him I was.—He then told me that he had a private matter to communicate, and did not want me to tell who informed me; that orders had been issued by Hosea Stout to all the sentinels, that if I crossed the bridge to kill me and throw me over the railing into the creek. I immediately started to the council, and the sentinel on the bridge hailed me. I told him that I was the person that he had orders to kill and throw into the creek, and at the instant set forward my foot, taking him by the arms. I threw him his length on the floor of the bridge, then passing on into the council tent, I demanded of Brigham Young what kind of order had been given the guard to kill me and have me thrown over the bridge into Sugar Creek.

He said he did not know that any such order had been given. We had Stout and some of the guard sent for, who appeared before the council, and upon examination stated that Stout had given the order to kill me.—Stout said, on mustering and charging the guard that he had, by way of joke, said to the guard, let all who pass the bridge to the council except Bishop Miller, go unmolested, but kill him and throw him over the bridge. He supposed all had understood it as an idle joke, as he had spoke at his usual tone of voice, and in a public way. The guard said they did not know whether Stout had been joking or not, but could not think he was in earnest, as it seemed to them a very strange order. They were inclined to think he was joking.

We had repeated delays, from causes which I could not find out. On one day orders would be issued to go ahead, and perhaps the day after to stop and lay by in camp. On one particular occasion the two brothers, O. and P. P. Pratt, and a company of others and myself, had gone on ahead about eight miles, where we lay in camp a day or two, awaiting the coming up of Young, when a messenger arrived from Brigham with orders to return forthwith to their camps, and give an account of ourselves, or they would cut us off from the church for disobedience. We got on our horses and rode back. I remonstrated at their high handed measure. They said that they had sent for us, to have us in their council. And in such like manner our time was consumed, without making much progress on our journey. And it was not until the 13th of June that we arrived at Council Bluffs, a distance of two hundred and seventy-five miles from the city of Nauvoo, by my computation.

Here another round of delay took place, and it was not until the 6th of July that we crossed the Missouri River, and only a minor part of the camp at that. About this time a deputation of officers came up from Fort Leavenworth, with orders from Gen. Kearney that we could not be permitted to leave the U. S. with the bad feelings we entertained against the general government, and go to California, unless we furnished a battalion of soldiers to operate with the U. S. against Mexico in the present war; and if we refused compliance, we were to be forthwith dispersed into the States.

Brigham called a council, (I did not attend.) The result of their deliberations was to enlist a battalion for one year's term of service, and were to be mustered out of service, with permission to retain their arms, and conditioned that such mustering out of service should take place at San Francisco. About this time the Sioux Indians attacked the Pawnee Loup Indian village, burnt and sacked it, (the Pawnees' being on their summer hunt,) and no one at the village but the missionaries, farmers, &c. They took alarm and sent a despatch to the Bluffs for teams to bring them and their effects down to the Bluffs. I made a bargain to haul them and their effects down, and forthwith started (the distance 120 miles) with thirty-two wagons, and the families thereto belonging, intending to unload the families and camp, and let the teams return with the missionaries to the Bluffs.

We started on the expedition on the 9th of July, and on the 18th we arrived at the mission station, and on the 22d July we sent them to Council Bluffs.—We received in payment for hauling the effects of the missionaries their standing crop of wheat, oats and garden vegetables, together with a lot of old corn, which was all better for us than money. While the teams were gone with the missionaries' goods we harvested and thrashed our grain, shelled the corn, and sacked all ready for a move on return of our teams. One morning before the dew dried off so that we could proceed to threshing, we saw persons walking in the distance, and by the aid of a glass distinctly ascertained that the objects were eight Indians approaching. They came up without any hesitancy, and when I interrogated them through James Emmet, who acted as interpreter, we ascertained that they consisted of the principal chief of the Pawnee, and some chiefs or braves, who had come to offer assurances of peace to the Pawnees, lest they might think that the Pawnees had taken part in the burning and sacking of the Pawnee village. We pitched a tent for them, and extended our hospitality towards them.

On the return of our wagons from the Bluffs, a large number of wagons came up from there, which increased our whole number to two hundred and forty, and persons to six hundred, with written orders from B. Young to start forthwith for California. I had sent four men to the Bluffs to bring up two cannon, six pounders, that had not yet returned; but, nevertheless, I commenced crossing the River Platte, as our road lay on the south side of the Loup fork, on which we were then camped.

On the 8th of August our men got back that we had sent for the cannon, bringing another letter from Brigham Young, directing me to stop short where I was; organize a high council of twelve, and for me to preside over them in their deliberations, and for said council to manage all matters relating to my camp (as it was called,) both spiritual and temporal, and go into winter quarters, some at the place we then were at, and the others at Grand Island, on the south Platte.

Our Punka Indian Chief was yet with us. We informed him of the purport of the orders we had received from our big captain. He told us that it would not do, at all; that our big captain knew nothing of Indian customs; that the Pawnees wintered their horses at Grand Island, and that our immense herd would eat up all the feed before the winter was half gone, and when the Pawnees came in from their summer hunt they would kill all our cattle, and drive us away; that it was wholly impracticable to winter in the places designated by our big captain. But said, if we would go with him to his village, on or near the Loquocore or Running-water River, that there was rushes abundant to winter all our cattle, and to spare; that it was his country, and he had the granting of privileges, and that there was none to object, and he could ride to it on his pony in two days.

We held a council in regard to what should be done in our present circumstances, and unanimously agreed to go with the Punka chief to his village. He had already agreed to act as pilot. We had in the mean time re-crossed the Platte River, and on the 13th of August started for the Punka village. We saw and killed a number of Buffalo on our route, and without loss or accident arrived on the 23d of August at the Punka village, and found every thing as represented by the Indian chief.

The excitement and surprise was very great in the Punka camp at our approach. They were riding and running in every direction, twenty or thirty riding towards us, (we were, no doubt, a great curiosity to them, two hundred covered wagons and a vast herd of cattle.) On nearing us they recognized their chief, who spoke to them, and all was calm. The chief was quite sick at this time, but however he called a council of all his chiefs and braves, and made a long speech to them, after which he told us that the land was before us, and to build ourselves lodges and feel ourselves at home. We made them some presents, and then prepared setting about making shanties for the winter. The name of the chief is Tea-nuga-numpa, signifying, or rather interpreted, Buffalo, Bulls, two.

We were now, as we supposed, at home. But very serious results sometimes grow out of very trifling things. The old chief continued sick, and as our wagons were moving up to the place of our shanties we passed through the Indian camp, and all the Indians, on a rush, with arms in hand, came upon us, threatening destruction, saying their chief was dying, and we must have poisoned him. I ordered a halt, and went into the chief's lodge, and found him just recovering from a fainting fit. He

It then says: "Let the denial speak for itself." Upon inquiry we learn that we were mistaken."— have was from from Is-

the what taton redn't fits it er of tified
aring his d no
tain.
the not uge
ree end-be of lect
ble use hen
you ply, us."
ake
s a ing ub-
ake in old for ry, to fan."
in es, a-er
ust to me all at er atvan
is a y
is ree red

And explains how it was misled as to the number of horses shipped at China.

With this general admission of mistake, made at the bottom of our sweeping and circumstantial denial of everything connected with the accusation, and coupled with a reiteration of other criminal accusations of a different nature, and none in this case, we submit that no man could understand the Gazette otherwise than we did.

As for the dark-lantern fraternity, we were about to say, "possibly you have us there," but it is enough to say that we have never discovered one word in the Gazette indicating its relation to that institution. We only judged it by the company we found it in.

LIFTING THE CHALICE TO THEIR OWN LIPS.

Just this side of the Missouri and Kansas boundary a few years since a foray was made on the Mormons, and they were all banished from the State, and their property confiscated. The only pretence made by the Missourians was that they were believers in a new and strange religion, and non-shareholders.

All christendom justified the outrage, but our northern anti-slavery christian Yankees invented the story that the Mormons were robbed and banished in reality for their crimes, and not for their religion, or their pin labor.

Well are they paid for it. Now since the opening of Kansas to slavery these same northern anti-slavery, christian Yankees have sent out colonies of the most staid, honest and peaceable of their neighbors to preserve that land to freedom.

These same Missourians, profiting by the lessons they have learned from the Yankees, are driving them out as ox stealers. Thus they are eating the fruits of their own planting. The following resolutions were recently passed at a public meeting in Atchison, Kansas:

Resolved, That one J. W. B. Kelly, hailing from Cincinnati, having upon sundry occasions denounced our institutions, and declared all Pro-Slavery men ruffians, we deem it an act of kindness to rid himself of such company, and hereby command him to leave the town of Atchison one hour after being informed of the passage of this resolution, never more to show himself in this vicinity.

Resolved, That other emissaries of this Aid Society who are now in our midst tampering with our slaves are warned to leave, else they too will meet with the reward which their nefarious designs so justly merit—hemp.

Resolved, That we approve and applaud our fellow-townsmen, Grafton Thomson, for the castigation administered to the said J. W. B. Kelly, whose presence is a libel upon our good standing and a disgrace to this community.

Resolved, That we have commenced the good work of purging our town of all resident Abolitionists, and after cleansing our town of such nuisances, shall do the same for the settlers on Walnut and Independence Creeks, whose propensities for CATTLE STEALING are well known to many.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published, that the world may know our determination.

That is the stealing story the Yankee christians invented for the benefit of the Mormons. They dug the pit, and they have fallen into it. These men whose propensities for stealing cattle are so well known, are a fair average sample of honest, industrious down east farmers, just as the Mormon thieves in Missouri and Illinois were; just such men as those at Beaver Island are, whom these same Yankee christians are as ready to malign as Atchison, Stringfellow & Co. are to malign them. When they learn to do justice they may expect it in return.

The reader may be interested in knowing the crime for which Mr. Kelley was flogged and banished. HE WAS SUSPECTED OF HAVING ADVISED A SLAVE WOMAN TO DROWN HERSELF. The evidence was that she had drowned herself, and he said, "she did right. Death was more tolerable than slavery." That is all.

A beautiful government we have, when such things are done boldly, and there is no remedy.

President Pierce is sick. Every man who desires the stability of the United States' government should pray for his recovery. Were he to die, a low, drunken, fighting, barroom brawler, by the name of Atchison, of the Missouri border, would actually be President of the United States till a special election.

GREAT TURTLEDOM.

In June last Hon. Jas. Guthrie, Sec. of the Treasury, superseded the Keeper and Assistant Keeper of the Light House at Skillingalee Rock, and appointed in their places Alden Hale and Charles Hale. The commissions of the Messrs. Hale were sent to Mackinac, addressed, "Alex. Toll, Esq., Collector." But Mr. Toll had been recently superseded in that office by J. A. T. Wendell.

Between the two it was managed that the Hales never received their commissions; Mr. Toll alledging that he offered them to Mr. Wendell, as the officer properly charged with delivering them, and Mr. Wendell that he never had control of them. Between them the commissions were returned to Washington, with a most pressing effort that the appointment be withdrawn, and the old incumbents re-appointed.

All this was characteristic of Mackinac, as the old keepers were turned out for plundering a wrecked vessel, lost probably by their neglect to keep a proper light, and expressing the hope of another wreck out of which they could make enough to retire on; all of which was proved on them by some of the most respectable business men in Kenosha.

But the Sec. of the Treasury issued new commissions to the Messrs. Hale, and sent them to Mr. Wendell early in July, which he retained until September, when, hearing through the Islander that Mr. Strang was in receipt of a letter from the Sec. of the Treasury on the subject, he sent them along.

So the 11th of Sept. Mr. Hale came into possession of an appointment, made at Washington in June, and went over to Skillingalee Rock to enter upon the duties, when he was met by the old keeper with instructions from Mr. Wendell to hold on, and refuse to deliver up possession until further instructions from Washington.

There can be but one purpose in keeping up this state of things; and that is, to insult and abuse those without whose assistance the Democratic ascendancy could not have been maintained in this District. In due season the tree will bear its fruits. The following correspondence is a proper index to the foregoing:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 17, '55.

Sir:—You have been superseded as Assistant Keeper of the Light House at Waquois, Mich., by the re-appointment of Joseph Blanchard to that office.

Your services in that capacity will, therefore, be no longer required.

I am, respectfully,

Sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES GUTHRIE.

Sec. of the Treasury.

PHINEAS WRIGHT, Esq.

Reply.

SAINT JAMES, Mich., Sept. 9th, 1855.

HON. JAS. GUTHRIE, Sir:—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of July 17, under cover from J. A. T. Wendell, Collector at Michilimackinac, of Sept. 1, informing me that I am superseded as Assistant Keeper of the Light House at Waquois, Mich.

I beg to assure you that this is the first information I have had that I had ever received the appointment. If by any means I have failed in any respect in promptness, it may perhaps be attributed to the fact that appointments do not easily get past Mackinac in this direction.

I have the honor to be,

Sir, yours faithfully,

PHINEAS WRIGHT.

We commend to the lovers of freedom and republicanism the following law of Kansas Territory. Especially do we commend it to Putnam, who fears the anti-republican influence of the Mormon hierarchy in Utah, and thinks that to save the Union Utah should be kept out.

Now, reader, don't gape and stare, and say such a law could only be enacted by Atchison's toppers and Stringfellow's bloodhounds. A dozen States have similar laws.

What says Putnam? Are these institutions republican? Under the constitution, has Kansas a right to be admitted as a State?

Section 1. Every person, bond or free, convicted of raising a rebellion of slaves, free negroes or mulattoes, shall suffer death.

Sec. 2. Every free person who shall aid in any rebellion of slaves, &c., or do any overt act in furtherance thereof, shall suffer death.

Sec. 3. If any free person shall, by speaking, writing or printing, advise, induce, &c., any slave to rebel, conspire against or murder any citizen of Kansas, or shaft import or aid in importing such documents, he shall suffer death.

Sec. 4. If any person shall entice, decoy or carry out of Kansas, any slave belonging to another, with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the services of such slave, or procure the freedom of such slave, he shall suffer death, or be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than ten years.

Sec. 5. If any person shall assist in enticing, &c., as above, shall suffer death, or be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than ten years.

Sec. 6. If any person shall entice or carry away out of any State or Territory of the United States, any slave, and shall bring such slave into this Territory, &c., he shall suffer death, or be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than ten years.

Sec. 7. If any person shall entice any slave to escape from the service of his master or owner, or shall aid any slave in escaping, he shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than five years.

Sec. 8. If any person in this Territory shall harbor or assist any escaped slave from another State, such person shall be punished in like manner as if such slave had escaped from his master in this Territory.

Sec. 9. If any person shall resist any officer while attempting to arrest any slave that may have escaped, or shall rescue such slave, or aid such slave to escape from an officer, the person so offending shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than two years.

Sec. 10. If any marshal, sheriff or constable, or the deputy of any such officer, shall, when required, refuse to aid or assist in the arrest or capture of any slave that may have escaped, such officers shall be fined not less than $100 or more than $500.

Sec. 11. If any person print, write, introduce into, publish or circulate, or cause to be brought into, printed, written, published or circulated, or shall knowingly aid or assist in bringing into, printing, publishing or circulating within this Territory, any book, paper, &c., containing any statements, doctrines, &c., calculated to produce a disaffection among the slaves of this Territory, he shall be punished with imprisonment at hard labor, for not less than five years.

Sec. 12. If any free person, by speaking or by writing, assert or maintain that persons have not the right to hold slaves in the Territory, or shall introduce into Kansas, print, publish, write, circulate or cause to be introduced into the Territory, written, printed, published or circulated in this Territory any book, paper, magazine, pamphlet or circular, containing any denial of the right of persons to hold slaves in this Territory, such person shall be deemed guilty of felony, and punished by imprisonment at hard labor for a term of not less than two years.

Sec. 13. No person who is conscientiously opposed to holding slaves, &c., &c., shall sit as a juror on the trial of any prosecution of any violation of any of the sections of this act.

Act to be in force after September 15th, 1855.

The latest news from Utah, is that the grasshopper calamity is less than was anticipated. The latter part of the season has been favorable, and the crops will be considerable. Fears of a general dispersion or actual starvation are no longer entertained.

Other accounts of the same date say only one-third of a crop will be made. Since writing the above we find the following letter of G. A. Smith, in the Mormon:

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, June 20th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Sir: The grasshoppers are still continuing their ravages throughout the Territory; young broods of them continually hatching out on every bench. Large crickets are also making their appearance, and the sound of the locusts is continually in the ears of the husbandmen.

The weather has been oppressively hot, and until the 28th inst., there has been no rain of any amount; so that the drouth was uncommonly great, and the streams very low. There is not as much snow on the mountains now, as there was last August, and the common house flies are as thick as they were in August and September. On the 28th the weather turned a little cooler, and there was a refreshing shower in Davis County, and a little rain in this.

The grain is all destroyed at Parowan and Paragona; they are fencing the public square at Parowan, and planting it with potatoes. Men, women, children, geese, ducks and chickens all conspire to try and raise something. Some of the brethren, because of the water falling at Parowan, have gone to the Rio Virgin to plant corn, and a number of hands have gone lumbering for the Iron Works. They have also organized a company to go and fish at Pan-gwitch Lake, at the head of the Seyler River, where there is beautiful trout in great abundance.

At Cedar City the brethren are quite busy casting machinery for the Iron Works. At Fillmore the wheat is entirely destroyed, Chalk Creek being very low. The finishing of the State House is progressing rapidly.

The fields in Juab County present the appearance of a desert. About two-thirds of the grain in Utah County is destroyed, and a large black bug is devouring the potatoes.

All the farms south of this city are nearly a desert; the northern counties and Tooele have fared considerably better, but within the last few days the latter have had a visit from the enemy, and the result is, the wheat stalks have lost their heads; and moreover, as the farms have been located on small streams, a large quantity of wheat is being burnt up for the want of water. This is rather a dark picture, but I regret to say it is not overdrawn. Myriads of grasshoppers, like snow flakes in a storm, occasionally fill the air over this city as far as the eye can reach, and they are liable to alight wherever they can distinguish good food. A great portion of them, however, alight in the Great Salt Lake, which appears green at a distance, and the shore is lined with their dead, from one inch to two feet thick, and which smell exactly like fish.

Wherever there is a chance for water the brethren are still planting corn.

I am sorry to say there will be no beets this year and very few onions, the grasshoppers having eaten them as fast as they appeared above ground. The prospect, however, for fruit is very good.

GEORGE A. SMITH.

Terrible Disclosures.

The Adrian Watch Tower is publishing some most astounding developments of Mormon life, purporting to be from the journal of a female Mormon. There is so much joking and howling going on in these days, that very little reliance can be placed in these wonderful stories. If the editor will say that there are no "Nails" about, he will relieve us of a "dreadful" heap of dabbings.—Detroit Times.

Why don't the Watch Tower send us a paper? We want to learn all about these Mormons. By the way, if any other paper wishes to obtain disclosures, we can recommend a correspondent, at a very moderate compensation, who can furnish anything foul in quantities to suit the public.

Among the recent publications of the Smithsonian Institution is a paper on the fish of the Northern Lakes, by James J. Strang. Mr. Strang was not aware of the publication until he learned of it through the newspapers, when he sent for and obtained the work. It was drawn up in haste, passed out of his hands without reading, and he had quite forgotten it. It is nevertheless, a paper of some interest.

WILLIAM C. BRYANT, the poet, in writing from the East, said that the Mohammedans are fast becoming Europeanized. They are becoming careless of the marriage vow, get drunk, beat their wives, bruise their children, associate with infidels, and in fact are getting to be almost like Christians.

STATE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

Office of Sup't Public Instruction, Lansing, August 7, 1855.

Applications in accordance with the provisions of law having been received at this Office from the following places, and their vicinities, and the same being regarded by this Department as eligible, the undersigned would hereby announce that a series of State Teachers' Institutes, to commence on the evening of the days named below, and to continue in session ten working days, severally, will be held as follows, viz:

At Detroit, beginning August 27th; at Rome, beginning September 10th; at Flint, beginning September 24th; at Grand Rapids, beginning October 1st; at Niles, beginning October 15th; at Coldwater, beginning October 29th.

UTILITY OF TEACHERS' INSTITUTES.

Teachers' Institutes have received the earnest approval of eminent Educators since their establishment in the country, nearly fifteen years ago. They constitute an efficient agency both in providing well trained teachers for the school room, and in cultivating an intelligent and active public sentiment in favor of Education. Wherever they have been properly conducted, the people have been awakened to a livelier interest in the education of their children, and a marked improvement in the character of the instruction given in our primary and higher schools, has been apparent. That this series of State Teachers' Institutes may be productive of great public benefit, it is earnestly requested that all good citizens will lend whatever aid or influence they can to insure a full attendance of the Teachers of the State. And all persons contemplating the charge of Schools the ensuing season, it is hoped will avail themselves with alacrity of the benefits here offered, and attend some one of the Institutes from the beginning to the close of the session.

The Board of Instruction will be composed of able and experienced Teachers and Lecturers and will include Members of the Faculty of the Normal School, and of other literary institutions of the State.

LOCAL COMMITTEES.

It is desirable that a committee of active friends of the cause should be immediately appointed in each place where an Institute is to be held, with whom the undersigned may confer, and who may materially aid in making the necessary local arrangements for the successful prosecution of the enterprise.

LECTURES AND INSTRUCTIONS FREE.

All the expense which Teachers and others attending the Institutes will need to incur, will be for board, which in some instances I am assured will be at considerably reduced rates, and especially for ladies, of which due notice will be given by the Local Committee; or, at least, information may be had touching the matter by application to them.

IRA MAYHEW, Sup't of Public Instruction.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns. Mous de Laine and Bareges. Lawns, Shawls, &c.

A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish.

Book and Barred Muslins. Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores.

Staves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale.

68aa.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES.

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST.

J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Nail-rods, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused.

He has also on hand a small assortment of Clocks, Watches, Jewelry, &c.

Saint James, June 13th, 1855. 70a90*

The Packet "Maid of the Mist" will make weekly trips from Saint James to Galilee, Patmos, Charlevoix and Arbut Croche, carrying the mail. She has excellent accommodations for passengers.

THE DUTY OF THE STATE.

"Who bids for the little children—
Body and soul and brain;
Young and without a stain?
Who bids for the little children—
Young and without a stain?
Will no one bid for the children?
For their souls are pure and white,
And fit for all good and evil,
The world on their pages may write!"

"We bid," says Pest and Famine,
"We bid for life and limb;
Fever and pain and aqualor
Their bright young eyes shall dim.
When the children grow too many,
We'll nurse them as our own,
And hide them in secret places,
Where none may hear their moan."

"I bid," said Beggary, howling,
"I'll buy them, one and all;
I'll teach them a thousand lessons—
To lie, to skulk, to crawl.
They shall sleep in my fair like maggots,
They shall rot in the fair sunshine;
And if they serve my purpose,
I hope they'll answer thine."

"And I'll bid higher and higher,"
Said Crime, with wolfish grin,
"For I love to lead the children
Through the pleasant paths of sin.
They shall swarm in the streets to pilfer,
They shall plague the broad highway,
Till they grow too old for pity,
And ripe for the law to slay."

"Prison and hulk and gallows
Are many in the land,
'Twere folly not to use them,
So proudly as they stand.
Give me the little children,
I'll take them as they're born;
And I'll feed their evil passions
With misery and scorn."

"Give me the little children,
Ye good, ye rich, ye wise,
And let the busy world spin round,
While ye shut your idle eyes;
And your judges shall have work,
And your lawyers wag the tongue;
And the jailors and the policemen Shall be fathers to the young."

"Oh, shame!" cried True Religion,
"Oh, shame that this should be!
I'll take the little children—
I'll take them all to me.
I'll raise them up with kindness
From the mire in which they've trod;
I'll teach them words of blessing,
I'll lead them up to God."

A SERMON.

BY E. C.

"Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the king of Jacob." Isa. xli. 21. By these words we are not to understand that the Lord wishes men to bring forth what they at the present day call reasoning machines, viz., seventy-four pounders, but that he wishes them to bring some reason from the past why he should not fulfill all his promises which are to take place in the future. Not to come out and say, away with your heresy, without a reason, and if you do not start they bring forth the machines to reason a man away, whether he wishes to go or not.

Now for a little reason from the past. God called Moses to go down into Egypt to accomplish a certain work. He did not send him with those machines for reasoning, but told him to go, and when the people asked him by whom he was sent, or by what authority he came? to say to them, I Am hath sent me unto you. In all probability this was not a very satisfactory answer to them, for they seemed to doubt his authority, and when he asked a favor of them he was denied; as much as to say, if you are sent, as you pretend, help yourself.

Now Moses was made God to Pharaoh, and Aaron was his prophet. Ex. vii. 1. Pharaoh being the acknowledged king of the Egyptians, and Moses being made God to Pharaoh, would make him God to the Egyptians. But he did not come out with some great exploit to prove to the people that he was their God, but undertook to reason with them. They being men of great wisdom in the arts of that age thought to confound him, and therefore asked him to do something—show them a sign, that they might believe.

Moses threw down his rod, and it became a serpent. Whereupon the magicians were called upon, and did the same thing, thinking that they had him fast. But, to their great surprise, Moses' serpent swallowed up their serpents. After reasoning with them for a long time, and warning them that as the serpent had been swallowed up, even so would they be, by the overflowing scourge of the Almighty, if they did not hearken to his counsel, their hearts became hardened, and they would hear no more.

Moses then proceeded to accomplish his mission, according to the wisdom of God. After telling them what would be accomplished Pharaoh hardened his heart from time to time, until at last the first born of all living was required.—Then Pharaoh and all Egypt took up a lamentation, and told Moses to do even as he would. Whereupon Moses took his people and started to accomplish what God designed.

But what followed? Ah, Pharaoh's heart was again hardened. All the reasonings that Moses had presented were set aside. All the miracles he wrought were overlooked. All his long-suffering and patience towards them was a thing of naught. All the covenants with him were then to be broken, and the chariots and horsemen were gathered together, and the armies of Pharaoh, with machines for reasoning, (all else having failed,) not their own wills, for many of them believed on the words of Moses, but had to do the bidding of Pharaoh. And as it was told them, "even as the serpent was swallowed up so would they be," so it was done. Their reasoning machines did not save them.

I have scarcely begun what might be said of the ministry of Moses, and so I might follow down through all the prophets, but I omit them, and come down to Christ, and shall be very brief. Jesus Christ was born in a stable, and cradled in a manger.—Overlooking, as all the sects do, what was said of his coming, this is rather a small beginning for a man who has attained to be a God, according to the opinions among men at the present day. At the age of twelve years we find him reasoning in the Temple with doctors and lawyers, not with machine reason, but with the wisdom given him of God.

From that time on he continued to reason with men, and many have supposed that he commenced from that time to do mighty works, such as turning boys into goats, and such like operations. But he commenced in his ministry at the age of thirty, with the authority of the priesthood above all his fellows, even as Moses was above Pharaoh. He and the Apostles still continued to try the effect of reasoning, they being co-workers with him, to turn men from their evil ways. And when men found that they could not justify themselves with any reason that they could produce, and that there was no guile in the mouth of him that confounded them, therefore he was stretched between the heavens and the earth to die for the pure reasons of the hope that he had within him.

Much might be said of the ministry of Christ, his persecutions, sufferings, &c., but I omit it for the present, and come down to our day.

We hear men saying, now a days, if I had lived in the days of Moses, and could have seen the works that he did, I would not have doubted for a moment. It seems that for a man to reject what he can see and hear for himself is inexcusable. Did not Moses say, "a prophet shall the Lord your God raise up like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things?"—Now who prophesied of Moses before he came, so that the people might be looking for him? We have the word of the Lord through all the holy prophets concerning the work of the last days, and because, as in the days of Moses, men have their prepossessioned opinions of the dealings of God with the children of men, when they see the very things they say they would have believed in Moses' day they thrust them away, just as men of that age did.

Another does not put it so far off, but says if he had lived in the days of Christ, and could have seen some of the miracles that he performed he would have laid down his life for such an one. This is what they say, but let us look at the reason of it. They have the history of Christ to guide them in the path of duty, and the teachings of the Apostles after his death for a way mark, and they all tell of things to transpire in the last days. But men have got their minds made up how it must come to meet their approbation, just as the people in Moses' time and in the days of Christ had their minds fixed, not remembering that the ways of men are foolishness before God.

Christ came in the very manner that he was prophesied of, and he did the things which were said he would do to bring about the redemption of the whole human family. And because he did those things he was rejected. He went about preaching the gospel of life and salvation, and administering in the authority of his priesthood, in the ordinances that pertain to the house of God. Yet he was called a wine bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. Rather a grave charge against the son of God. Had not men better be a little cautious now a days, lest they find themselves in the same dilemma?

This is the character of which men say, Oh! if I had only lived in that day, I should have been the happiest being that ever did live. Did you ever read the scriptures enough to know that there was a similar work to transpire in the last days? If so, why regret that you did not live in Christ's day? He was called a Nazarene, a wine bibber, a friend to publicans and sinners. Doubtless this sounded as bad to the people of that day, as the name Mormon does to the pious hypocrites of our day. The prophet of God at this day is not charged of being a wine bibber, though he may have all the other charges heaped upon him as falsely as Christ did.

Now let me entreat you to not let this blindness lead you to ruin. Open your eyes and see for yourselves the things transpiring that were prophesied of, and you an eye witness. Say not that there are many lo heres and lo theres, and I do not know which to follow, for Christ himself gave you the key that you might know who are his followers, and he said go not after those lo heres and lo theres. This latter day work is to be the greatest that was ever accomplished upon the earth. It is to form a connecting link between the living and the dead, and bring out the prisoners from the prison house. Isa. xlii. 7. It is the time when God's everlasting kingdom is to be set up on the earth, no more to be thrown down, and is to stand until everlasting righteousness and the rest of God is brought in to all the saints.

Now do not fool yourselves, as those men in the time of Moses and of Christ did. Do not let your posterity have it to say of you as you do of your progenitors, if I had lived in a day when the gospel was preached and the gifts were among men, I would have believed, for you have them before your eyes. Remember that there are none so blind as those that will not see. Do not stand back, Pharaoh like, till you are scourged by the hand of the Almighty until you wake up in hell. Remember that this Mormonism, which is everywhere spoken evil against, is the power of God unto salvation, and that amid all the evil speaking we have the consoling words of him who died between the heavens and the earth, that we might live; he whom you so much desired to live in the days of, saying: "Blessed are ye when men persecute you and revile you, and say all manner of evil against you, falsely, for my sake."

Having these things in view, with many others, we Mormons go forth as Moses and Christ did, challenging men to reason. But it has been in this age as it was then, men have failed to find a reason to justify their case, and they have resorted to machine reasoning, until some of God's chosen men have felt a victim to them, and their blood cries for vengeance upon the ungodly. It is by the mercies of God that they are spared for a little season, and we are still crying to you as watchmen on the walls of Zion, and warning you to flee the wrath to come, for the judgments of God will not slumber.

Arouse from your slumber, shake the scales from your eyes, and no more say if we had lived in some ancient time we would have done so and so, but put shoulder to the wheel now. Now is the time—now is the day of salvation. Remember that if you procrastinate the day, you do it at your own peril. Never look back to see what somebody did not do that you would have done if you had been in their place, but lay hold now, while there is a chance, and do your own work, and redeem the time they have lost.

Know ye not that you must become as little children, and be willing to learn wisdom from the least of his servants, or you will perish in your ignorance? The Lord always takes a different course from the one marked out for him by the wisdom of the world, in order to confound the wise and bring to naught the understanding of the prudent. He chooses men of low degree, even the simple and unlearned, and those who are despised, to do his work and bring about his purposes, that no flesh shall glory in his presence. O, ye wise and ye learned, know ye not that it was impossible for the world by wisdom to find out God? Then look about for those despised ones spoken of, and if they are called Nazarenes or Mormons, or any other name that sounds bad, just for a moment bring your reasoning faculties to bear, and if they have the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, embrace it.

THE LONDON SEWING WOMEN.

The London papers have been calling attention recently to the deplorable condition of the London milliners and mantua makers. Twenty-five thousand young women, between sixteen and thirty years old, are worked in gangs in ill ventilated rooms, without speech, without relaxation, without a smile, for eighteen hours out of every twenty-four. In the gray of morning they begin, and with the allowance of a quarter of an hour for breakfast, twenty minutes for dinner, and fifteen minutes for tea, they stitch till one, two and three o'clock in the morning. During the hours for rest they are cooped up in sleeping pens, ten in a room, barely large enough for two. Not a word of remonstrance is allowed. They may leave, indeed, but, on the other side of the door, starvation awaits them, or a fate still more dreadful.

Methodist Preachers in 1839, vs. Methodist Preachers in 1855.

To the Editors of the Chicago Dem. Press: I hasten to inform you of another mob in Platte county. The Methodist Church North had an appointment for quarterly meeting near Forley. The presiding elder, preachers and congregation had assembled and concluded the morning service, and were proceeding, when a mob of about eighty armed men made their appearance. The congregation, it being warm, were seated in the shade in front of the house, and the preachers were inside. When Dr. Walker led the mob to the door where Rev. Mr. Moore was preaching, and seizing him, Mr. Morris drew his revolver and cocked it, when some one caught his arm and took from him. The mob then rushed on him, yelling, "Hang him! shoot him!" Some in the congregation interceded for him, and after a long parley they consented to let him go, under a pledge to leave and not preach any more till they gave him permission. The rest of the preachers escaped during the disturbance, and the congregation broke up and dispersed. The preachers were all armed with revolvers. They are aware of the threats daily made against them. The mob brought tar and feathers and hemp along with them. The excitement is great. These humble and pious ministers of religion will be driven out, and utter lawlessness prevail. In haste, TRAVELER.

Platte County, Mo., June 30, 1855. These "humble and pious men" are now reaping the fruits of the seed that was so diligently sown by some of their humble and pious brethren, in Caldwell, Dewitt, and Davis counties, in Missouri in 1839. We happened to be traveling to Far West, Caldwell Co., Mo., when stopping at a friend's house in Dewitt, an armed mob of 150 men came down upon the inhabitants of that village, then about 24 in number; for a pretext they brought the Sheriff along with them, with the avowed purpose of serving a process upon a Mr. Hinckle, a Mormon, thinking he would resist, but for the real purpose of mobbing the people. Mr. Hinckle submitted to the process, which baffled in a measure the designs of the mob. To obviate all difficulty, however, two humble and pious men, Sessiel Woods and Abbot Hancock, the one a Baptist and the other a Presbyterian minister, of Carrollton, Carroll Co., Mo., led the mob on, who were kept in check by the Mormons from committing any particular outrage at that time. They, however, after firing off their guns, and showing other demonstrations of pious hostility, passed resolutions, pledging themselves to "return in two days, and if the Mormons were not gone, to burn their houses and throw their goods into the Missouri river." This they religiously observed.

A Mr. Bogard, a humble and pious Methodist preacher, headed a mob with which he burned houses, destroyed property and life, and committed some of the grossest outrages that ever disgraced humanity. Having got his hand in with Mormons, he commenced on others, and shot a man who was not a Mormon. This, of course, was neither pious nor religious, and could not be tolerated. He left and preached his way to Texas, where the people, no doubt, would be very much edified with his piety. These circumstances took place in the neighborhood of this late disgraceful affair. We believe that a Methodist preacher was the ringleader of that band of ruffians that murdered Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in Carthage jail. The Methodist papers have been the foremost among the pious journals in seeking by false representation to bring persecution upon the Mormons; whether they were all pious people that were led by these pious, humble leaders, we of course don't know. Perhaps, after all, there is a retributive justice that may even reach the cases of pious, humble people. They have opened the flood-gates; the waters rise higher than they bargained for; "they have sown the wind, they reap the whirlwind." They have raised a tempest that threatens their own bark. We think with the scriptures—"With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again."—Mormon.

Something for the Ladies.

The London Gazette contains some important information for the ladies, in regard to the manner of placing their lips when they desire to look amiable, dignified, &c. It says when a lady would compose her mouth to a bland and serene character, she should, just before entering the room, say Bonom, and keep the expression into which the mouth subsides, until the desired effect upon the company is evident. If, on the other hand, she wishes to assume a distinguished and somewhat noble bearing, not suggestive of sweetness, she should say Brush, the result of which is infallible.—If she would make her mouth small and pretty, she must say Flip; but if the mouth be already small, and needs enlarging, she must say Cabbage. Ladies, when having their daguerotypes taken, may observe these rules with some advantage.

"You Forgot Me."

A good joke is told at the expense of one of our church-going citizens, who is the father of an interesting family of children, and among them a bright eyed boy, numbering four or five summers, the pet of the household, and unanimously voted the drollest little mischief alive. On Saturday night, he had been bribed to keep the peace, and retire to bed an hour earlier than usual, with the promise that on the morrow he might go with the family to church.—On Sunday morning it was found inconvenient to put the youngster through the regular course of washing and dressing for his proper appearance at the sanctuary, and the family slipped off without him. They had not, however, got more than comfortably seated in their pew, when in walked the youngster, with nothing on but his night-wrapper and a cloth cap. "You forgot me," said he, in a tone loud enough to be heard all over the church.—The "feelings" of the parents can be more easily imagined than described.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 12.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, SEP. 20, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 79.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

(Concluded.)

Saint James, July 1, '55.

All seemed to go on well with us for a time, until the Indians left on their winter's hunt. A short time after they had gone, all of our horses were stolen, with the exception of those belonging to James Emmet. A council was called to deliberate on the course best to be pursued in regard to the stolen horses. Nearly all were in favor of raising men, and pursuing the Indians and re-taking our horses. I alone opposed the measure, on the grounds that the Punks had most likely taken our horses, and it would not be advisable to break friendship with our Punka friends, as we were in their country; and if they had not taken them, as their chief had promised us protection, that they might undertake to recover our horses for us; and if the brethren would leave the matter to me, that I would recover the horses; and in case of failure, if I could not satisfy them, I would become responsible to them for their horses.

My offer was agreed to, and James Emmet and myself set out to find the Punka camp. We proceeded up the Loquocore River about one hundred and twenty miles, and came up with them. They manifested great pleasure in seeing us. On approaching their camp we discovered some of our horses running out among the Indian horses. It was but a short time after taking care of the animals we had rode until we were invited to partake of a feast at the lodge of the principal chief, and so on, in quick succession, until we ate four feasts, prepared at the lodges of chiefs. And at night we were conducted to the lodge of the principal chief, and after the usual ceremony of smoking, the chief said, if we had any thing to say we would then talk.

I accordingly began my speech by inquiring how they succeeded in their hunt. The chief replied, considering their lack of horses to ride in the chase, that they were making a very good hunt, and if we would send up four wagons he would load them with meat.

I told him we had nothing but ox teams, and they would not be able for the trip. If we took them from the rushes they would starve, as they could not eat the cottonwood bark as the horses; that I thanked him for his kind offer, and that I was sorry that I had not horses sufficient for their successful winter's hunt; but we were so poor that we could not help him, or we would gladly do it; that we had but eighteen horses, and I supposed that on account of their great lack of horses his men had taken them, as I had seen the horses among theirs; but for us who were chiefs it would not do to break friendship, on account of our men doing wrong; that if I was rich I would give them the horses, but as I was poor that I could not do it, as they all belonged to my men.

I told them further, that I knew the Indians could take better care of horses than we could, and I was glad they had them; that they needed them on their hunt, and could return them in the spring in better plight than if we were to keep them ourselves. At this time the chief arose and smote on his breast, saying, his heart was sick; that my tongue was not forked; that I looked good to him, just as I did when he first saw me; that his whole heart was sick, to think his men had taken the horses of so good a man.

Then turning to the interpreter and saying a few words, he went out, and in a few minutes I heard the war chief going through their camp among the lodges, making a loud and long harangue. After he had done a silence prevailed, and the chief coming up to me, said, walk outside. Then presenting the horses, said, they are all here. I told him I did not want the horses, I would lend them to him till spring, and they might then return the horses, or buffalo robes, at their option. After this we smoked, and the chief allotted us our lodgings for the night. We laid down, and had a comfortable night's rest.

Next day, after feasting abundantly on the best of fat venison and buffalo meat, and receiving many assurances of good will, we set on our journey home, loaded with all the meat we would carry.

In the course of the winter we sent down eighteen wagons to Missouri for provisions, (a distance of 330 miles,) as we were apprehensive that we might be short before we should get on our next year's supply.

I saw daily manifestations of Brigham Young's jealousy and hatred towards me, as indicated by the letters he wrote up to our camp to sundry individuals, warning them not to let me prejudice their minds against the authorities of the church.

Part of the teams we sent down to Missouri, having stayed longer than I anticipated, and Brigham having sent an express to me to meet them in council at winter quarters, and bring James Emmet with me, (as he had also in Joseph's lifetime been organized into the council of fifty princes of the kingdom,) and not fail in coming, as important matters were to be taken into said council for their consideration and action.

I at the receiving of the message, thought I should not go; but my son Joshua, not having yet returned from Missouri, where he had gone with others to purchase grain, I altered my mind, and concluded to go, and after the counseling should have ended, help my son home to Punka village.

I had been down to winter quarters and returned a short time before this, and had the journey to perform on foot, (a distance of 180 miles,) and to a second time seemed rather a task. But, however, Emmet and myself set off, hunted and killed our food on the way.—The excellencies of this man Emmet, as a skillful hunter and pioneer cannot be to highly spoken of, perhaps never excelled, even by the renowned Daniel Boone.

When we arrived at the Winter Quarters the council convened, but their deliberations amounted to nothing. But however, I was not wholly overlooked in their deliberations. Brigham Young, Kimball and Richards proposed I should come down to winter quarters, bringing with me part of my family, and take my place with Bishop Whitney in managing the fiscal concerns of the church, and I should be supported out of the revenues of the church, which, however, was not done. This council, originally consisting of fifty three members, and some twenty of them gone on missions, and by death and other means absent, was now swelled to a great crowd under Brigham's reign.

It adjourned sine die, and I proceeded on my way down into Missouri on foot, to meet my son. I went one hundred and forty miles before I met him.—The weather was intensely cold, and my son got his feet badly frost bitten. When we got to Winter Quarters, (about the 28th January, 1846,) I had presented to me a revelation, given through Brigham Young, in regard to the journeying of the saints west; Young intimated to me that a First Presidency would be organized.

I was greatly disgusted at the bad composition and folly of this revelation, as also the intimation that a First Presidency would be organized; that I was from this time determined to go with him no longer, and to look out a place where I might support my family, and remain until the true shepherd of God's flock should show himself, to lead the church and kingdom of God.—The trio, namely, Young, Kimball and Richards, sent up to Punka village E. T. Benson and others to teach the revelation received by Brigham Young, and assist in bringing me and part of my family to Winter Quarters or Council Bluffs, according to the decree of Brigham and his council.

I must confess that I was broken down in spirit on account of the usurpation of these arrogant Apostles, and their oppressive measures. I made a computation of the number of miles that I had traveled on foot during the course of the winter, to satisfy the desires of these capricious men, and it amounted to seventeen hundred miles; and as my mind was much depressed, my physical force was also greatly abated, and I really panted for a respite for a time from such needless toil, growing out of the jealousy of Brigham Young, lest I should lead away a body of the saints. he on one occasion prophesied that the President of the High Priests quorum would yet lead off a large body of the saints. He made the prophecy when I was not present. When it was told me I forthwith told my informant that I also would prophecy in my own name that President Young had prophesied a great lie in the name of the Lord; that really and truly I would have nothing to do with his corrupt rot-heap; and when I left the leadership that if any of them (the corrupt followers of Brigham) should follow me, I would shoot them. Those sayings of mine were currently retailed through the camp, and multiplied no doubt when returned to the ears of Brigham Young.

After I had been some time in the winter quarters I discovered that Young's promise had not in any part been made good in having me supported out of the church revenue. The wages of the men composing the battalion enlisted to serve in the Mexican war, was sent for and obtained under the pretext of supporting their wives and children. The amount of money obtained was represented to me to be about forty thousand dollars, which was invested partly in dry goods and groceries, and in supplying the quorum of the Twelve Apostles and their huge families; and as there was much sickness in Winter Quarters, I was informed that many of the soldiers' wives and children actually died for the want of the common comforts of life; and when any of them got any of the means obtained expressly for them, they got it out of the stores of goods bought with their own money, and charged to them at high retail prices, at the rates of 25 to 100 per centum, and many of them never got anything.

The men having no families sent back their wages also to support the soldiers' wives, but was never appropriated as intended. Some of my acquaintances asked me why I did not put in for a share in the soldiers' money. I told them that I would not eat, drink or wear their price of blood. All these sayings of mine were told Brigham Young. He came to me and asked me if I had said it; I told him that I had, and much more. He then said that such like apostasy had caused Joseph's death. I told him not to presume to place himself on a parallel with Joseph—the contrast was as disproportioned as between the ox and toad. Their usurpation was insufferable, and none but fools would bear it.

The whole camp at Punka village was sent for early in April, to come down to winter quarters. They arrived about the time the pioneers set off west to look out a location for a permanent settlement. Three of my oxen were stolen, as my son came down in this camp the night before they got to Winter Quarters. I tracked them into camp at Winter Quarters, and I was convinced that they were taken by some of the pioneers at Brigham's instance.

I now began preparing to look out a place to settle myself for a while at least, and on or about the first of May, set out as a wanderer and pilgrim on the earth, and as one having no shepherd, not since (as I had before realized) the prophet Joseph had been killed.

My first move was to find a suitable place to pitch a crop, and accordingly moved on down the Missouri River about thirty miles, and began to make examinations for a suitable location to make a farm, on the territory now being vacated by the Potawatamy Indians.

While looking out a place I received a message from an old acquaintance and neighbor of mine, to come or send him down some good mechanics, as he had a large amount of building that he wished to let out. I forthwith set off with my family to Col. Etill's, near Platteville, Mo., who had the above named work to let. But on my arrival Alpheas Cutler had, by false representation, that I was not coming, induced Etill to let him the job. Cutler had, the same day I got to Etill's started back to bring down workmen to execute the job he had foully supplanted me in undertaking.

I was now completely nonplussed, scarcely knowing what to do.

Most sincerely yours, &c.
GEORGE MILLER.

NATIONAL CHIROGRAPHIES.

It is a remarkable fact that no man can ever get rid of the style of hand writing peculiar to his country. If he be English, he always writes an English style; if French, in French style; if German, Italian or Spanish, in the style peculiar to his nation. Professor B—states: I am acquainted with a Frenchman who has passed all his life in England who speaks English like one of our own countrymen, and writes it with ten times the correctness of ninety-nine in a hundred of us; but who cannot for the life of him, imitate our mode of writing. I knew a Scotch youth, who was educated entirely in France, and resided sixteen years in that country, mixing exclusively with French people—but who, although he had a French writing master, and perhaps never saw anything but French writing in his life, yet wrote exactly in the English style: it was really national instinct. In Paris all the writing masters profess to teach the English style of writing; but with all their professions, and all their exertions, they can never get their pupils to adopt any but the cramped hand of the French. Some pretend to be able to tell the characteristics of individuals by their hand-writing. I know not how this may be, but certainly the nation to which an individual belongs can be instantly determined by his hand-writing. The difference between the American or English and the French hand-writing is immense—a schoolboy would distinguish it at a glance. Mix together a hundred sheets of manuscript written by a hundred Frenchmen, and another hundred written by Englishmen or Americans, and no one could fail to distinguish every one of them, though all should be written in the same language and with the same pens and paper. The difference between Italian, Spanish, and German hand-writing is equally decided. In fact, there is about as great a difference between the hand writings of different nations, as in their languages. And it is a singular truth, that though a man may shake off national habits, accent, manner of thinking, style of dress—though he may become perfectly identified with another nation, and speak its language as well, perhaps better than his own—yet, never can he succeed in changing his hand-writing to a foreign style.

It is a good thing to laugh at any rate, says Dryden: if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness.

GOOD OUT OF EVIL.

The judgments of the Almighty are just, and all his ways right.—When the people of Missouri banished the Mormons from that State in fire and blood, it was hard that those who had done so much in establishing God's law should be made the football of such vile wretches. But they had not been faithful to keep all his commandments, and it was necessary that they be further purified before they could establish his righteousness among men.

As fit was it that the vile men of Missouri should be the instruments to chastise them as that those of Babylon, ages before should chastise those who departed from God's law in Judah. As certain was it that they in their time should be judged.

It was a saying among the heathen, "whom the Gods will destroy they first make mad." The truth is, that God desires to save, not destroy. Destruction is the consequence of our sins. Every ruined people is the author of its own ruin.

Western Missouri is bringing on the reward of its iniquities, and all the State suffers with it. This is the consequential result of the Missouri vices, and not a providential act. The whole region is suffering from a moral blight and mildew. Its glory is dimmed, its spirit abated, and its hope faded.

Emigrants to Kansas all pass through Missouri. Out of them Missouri had begun to reap a rich harvest. But emigrants from the free States have nearly ceased to go, because they can get just as good land somewhere else, free from the power of mob law, and not ruled by bullies from just over the border.

Emigrants from the slave States do not go to Kansas, because the risk is too great. The free soil element is too strong. Kansas is the battle ground of slavery extension, and if they fail, the risk of losing their investment in slaves is too great. Slaves enough to stock a small plantation cost from $10,000 to $25,000. Such sums are too large to put in peril in a border war.

The slaveholders of the old slave States go to Louisiana or Texas. The freemen of the north and east go to Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska or Oregon. The foreign emigrants stop in Illinois or Wisconsin. All avoid Kansas as a plague spot.

The result is, Kansas, one of the fairest spots of earth, is neglected and idle; occupied by a few honest and earnest men from the free States, and lorded over by two score drunken bullies from Missouri, paid out of the national treasury, who have cursed and desolated the land by their presence.—Such is Kansas.

Western Missouri stands infected by the lawlessness in which she has been cursed for twenty years, and dwindles away under the moral leprosy of its lawless spirit and mobocratic leaders, now that their wrongs are wrought on somebody besides Mormons.

Business of all kinds is dull.—Money is scarce. There is no sale for cattle or produce. No emigrants are fitting out for California and Oregon. The report of inhospitality to Kansas emigrants has sent them another way.

Those who would otherwise go to the Platte purchase to purchase improved farms of the borderers who wish to "move west," dread a free border, in case the battle of Kansas should be against slavery, and the very men who are anxious to take slavery into Kansas lack the means.

The Kansas trade is not an item at St. Louis. Kansas steamers do not run on the river. There is nothing to carry. The sod remains unbroken in the prairie.—The sound of the axe is not heard, nor the smoke of the cabin seen.—The Kansas towns have no inhabitants. The lots will not sell for enough to pay for lithographing.

Of the fifty thousand emigrants who would have been there to make Kansas a State this year, not two thousand are there. The country is dead. Atchison and Stringfellow have dug its grave.—The grave of Missouri slavery yawns by the side of it.

Free labor produces and consumes vastly more than slave.—Thus it builds up great cities.—Much of the past growth of St. Louis is attributable to its free border. Southern Illinois was its back country, as well as Missouri. For that trade Cairo, Alton, Quincy and Chicago have all become successful competitors. Free States could make facilities not attainable in a slave State. Chicago, in twelve years, has increased its population by more than ten to one. St. Louis has little more than doubled hers.

To keep up in this race for metropolitan greatness, St. Louis needed railroads, and began them. They construct ten miles while Illinois, Wisconsin or Iowa do one hundred. Eastern men do not like to invest money in a slave State, where mobs rule. Their railroads will cross Iowa, while Missouri is struggling for means to continue work, and at Rock Island and Council Bluffs will spring up new rivals to St. Louis.

The tendency of emigration is rather to warmer latitudes. As free territory, Kansas would have filled up with great rapidity. Its productions would have poured into St. Louis in boundless abundance, to be paid for in merchandise and manufactures, on which St. Louis would have made an immense profit, and supported a vastly increased population. A new trade would have sprung up on the river, giving prosperity to all the towns along its banks.

The enterprising eastern men in Kansas would have called in capital from the east to push a railroad through that territory towards the Pacific, and thus helped the Missouri project by making it a necessary link in a continental work. St. Louis would have resumed its position as a metropolis, and Missouri become one of the most prosperous of States.

All this is thrown away in a lawless effort to carry slavery into Kansas. And this effort has been made by the very men who by the same means for six years, from 1834 to 1839 inclusive, were engaged in driving the Mormons from Missouri.

We recognize in the list of names of Atchison's toppers and Stringfellow's blood-hounds many of the same names as those engaged in that lawless foray, and here and there the same individual is a prominent figure. Had the Mormons been protected, there would have been no foray upon Kansas. Instead of the material for such a work, the Missouri border counties would have been densely populated with industrious free laborers. This foray has brought just retribution to the door of a host of sinners, and the present is but the beginning.

The body of Missourians, which have been sitting as the Legislature of Kansas, has adopted the Missouri code in general, but have passed numerous laws of special severity for the protection of slavery. Every act to facilitate the escape of a slave is punishable with death. The mere expression of sentiments unfavorable to slavery is made a high misdemeanor, incurring little less than capital punishment.

Residents of Missouri are allowed to vote in Kansas at a dollar a piece, and a special law is made against emigrants from Massachusetts, Michigan, and other States which have passed laws for the protection of free-men being reduced to slavery, requiring them to take an oath to support the fugitive slave law, and pay five dollars before they vote.

These bullies expect to subject free State men to all this, believing that northern and eastern men will not fight. It is a mistake. They do not like to fight. They had rather make farms, build mills, construct railroads, speck the land over with churches and schoolhouses, diversify it with towns and cities, and fill it to overflowing with wealth. But they will fight.

They are very fond of making money, and these Missouri outlaws have located the town lots among themselves. They have elected themselves county commissioners for a long term of years, and conferred on themselves the most plenary power of levying taxes, locating county seats, building roads and bridges, and in numerous ways raising public monies at the expense of the whole people for their private interests, and the Yankees will not submit. They will fight and not pay.

Northern and eastern men are fond of speaking freely their opinions on all subjects, and voting at elections for their rulers. The Missouri outlaws have made their common conversation a crime, next to murder. In the name of popular sovereignty they have taken the election of all local officers from the people, and that the free State men may have no hope in their increasing numbers, they have established but a single polling place to a county, and located that with sole reference to importing votes from Missouri, and browbeating and fighting down the free State men.

They will resist, and unless Congress settles the matter in some way, will resist till they root out the outlaws. Reluctantly as northern men fight, they will never withdraw from the contest defeated. Slave property will never be safe in Kansas, and the grave of Missouri slavery is dug.

Missouri will continue to languish under the blight of the present struggle. Kansas will fill up with horse-thieves, counterfeiters, bush-rangers, and all kinds of black-legs. It will become the roosting place of every foul bird.

Very slowly will industry and order grow out of this reeking mass of crime. The indignation of all the lovers of law and order in Missouri will, in the mean time sweep off the whole stock of borderers who are now doing the mischief unchecked. Every man in Missouri in the manufacturing and commercial interests will fraternize with the law and order party, in the hope that free labor will bring prosperity and a market. Then Missouri becomes the battle ground of slavery. Its grave is not dug too soon.

The free State party in Kansas are moving to adopt a constitution, and organize State government. This will raise the true issue of popular sovereignty. They ignore the late Legislature, and talk firmly of resisting its laws.—The fight is likely to begin in Congress. If not settled there, the free State men will fight it out to a satisfactory result at home.

Dates from Salt Lake to July 1st say the third sowing of grain had been destroyed. Rumors still later are from some points that the fourth sowing was likely to succeed, and from others that it was attacked and likely to fail.

Gov. Young with a large party had recently been up north to mark the boundary between Utah and Oregon. While there the grasshoppers appeared in that region, and the farmers were all engaged in cutting the grain in hopes of saving the straw for cattle feed.

A St. Louis paper says the Mormons are drying the grasshoppers, intending to use them for winter food. We see a Michigan paper thinks they are good enough for Mormons. Probably they are as good as the locusts which John the Baptist feasted on, and Herod thought them better than he deserved, and cut his head off. Like men, like judgment.

CHICAGO JOURNAL SOLD.

Correspondence of the Journal.

Excitement at Grand Traverse.

GRAND TRAVERSE, Aug. 28.

A great excitement is at present existing at Grand Traverse, Mich., growing out of recent Mormon outrages.

A few days since, two of the Mormon fraternity visited the house of a Mr. Ladd, and he being from home, took his child, telling its mother they would make a king of him. Mrs. L. called for help, when a plaster was put over her mouth. Three Indians, however, hearing her cries, proceeded to the house, when the Mormons decamped.

Subsequently, at midnight, four persons were seen prowling about the house, when they were fired upon, the shot taking effect upon one of them, who ran about three hundred yards and fell. He is supposed to be a Mormon.

The inhabitants of Grand Traverse are greatly excited, and intend holding a meeting to invoke the aid of the government. If denied them, they will take the responsibility, and drive them out from among them.

Yours, &c., O. S.

We find the foregoing in the Chicago Journal, of Sept. 1st, and hesitated whether to bestow on it a passing notice.

If there had been a case involving a controversy as to the custody of a child, or any attempt to recover possession of a child, wrongfully withheld, we should expect such use to be made of it, for the purpose of raising a public excitement against Mormons. They are never allowed to pursue the usual remedies for injuries done them, without some such appeal to public prejudice.

But no such thing has occurred. No one in the Mormon settlements claims any right to any child at Grand Traverse. Nor has any one been to Grand Traverse on any business or pretension whatever for three months past.

So far as the Mormons are concerned, there is not one word of truth in the statement. And we are inclined to the opinion that there is no truth in it in any respect.

A gentleman well known here, and on terms of familiar intercourse with the inhabitants, but a resident of Grand Traverse, was here a few days since on business, and we had long free conversation with him about Grand Traverse affairs, and especially of the public feeling there towards the Mormons. Though he informed us of a half dozen cock and bull stories there circulated about the Mormons, he made no mention of this, though it must have been a fresh occurrence, if it occurred at all.

Moreover, the story does not sound like truth. First—It is alleged that the men, the two boy stealers, were Mormons, but their names are not mentioned, and from the run of the story Mrs. Ladd did not know them, and of course did not know whether they were Mormons or not.

Second—It is incredible that any mere strangers would, in the presence of the mother, endeavor to persuade a child to leave her and go with them.

Third—To tell a child at Grand Traverse that they would make him a king among the Mormons would frighten, not persuade him.

Fourth—If men were undertaking such a crime, they would use the plaster first, not wait till the woman called help. Any fool knows a woman will not be silent and see her child carried into captivity by strangers.

Fifth—It is said one man was shot down the following night, and that he was supposed to be a Mormon; but nothing is said whether he was taken, dead, alive or not at all. If any such thing had occurred, this fact would have been stated; and if the man was alive, it would have been stated whether he was lynched, lodged in jail, or what his fate was.

Sixth—This man who was shot was only supposed to be a Mormon, the others were Mormons, though all were clearly unknown.

Unless the Journal has a well known correspondent, Dick Wilson may set himself down as sold. If he knows his correspondent, and is sure he is not running rigs on him, then the correspondent is fooled.

But whether fooled or not, he is a fool. What do the Mormons want to steal children for? With their dozen or twenty wives a piece, can't they raise as many children as they want? If they wanted more, could not they get them at the Chicago poor house, at half the expense of stealing them?

And this correspondent talks of

l expect for the ic excite They are he usual ne them, to pub-occurred.
lements child at any one on any whatever are convord of
And we on that any ren here, inter-se, was usiness, conversa-Travof the rds the formed d bull on the tion of been a rred at es not is alro boy
t their d from Ladd course were that in the leavor
e her Grand make rmons him.
under-would t till y fool silent cap-was night, be a said alive thing have was tated dged shot Mormons, own.
well
Wil-sold.
lent, rigs
t is he is ions
With
s a any hey get use,
ing
s of

petitioning government for help.—
Help for what? If they don't know who the criminals are, will the government know? Can it help their ignorance? And if they do know, why don't they arrest them? Never once did an officer come here to arrest a Mormon but he was forthcoming.

But if they expect resistance, why do they want any help to put it down? Do the people of Grand Traverse think they can exterminate the Mormons, and yet need help to come and arrest two or three men?

Who would have imagined that Dick Wilson, with his early experience in Illinois, and his two or three years tramp on the still wilder borders of Texas, would "suck such stuff?"

As for the indignation and the extermination, all we have to say is, "come when you dare." We know very well that the dread of us is all that saves us from murder. But we shall not eat or sleep the less.

Perhaps these men do well to keep up a continual irritation.—The dies irae will tell. If they wish to make Grand Traverse such another plague spot as Kansas, avoided by all honest and peaceable men, they have but to progress. It will not affect us further than to impress upon us the motto, "be ye always ready."

J. A. T. Wendell complains that the Islander was unjust to him, in asserting that he retained the appointments of the Messrs. Hale.

The commissions are dated early in July. We have not the exact date, but it was previous to the middle, and were mailed at Washington to Mackinac the day following. They could scarcely fail of being in Mackinac by the 20th July, and they reached here the 11th September, by a mail which left Mackinac that day.

Who retained them at Mackinac? Clearly either Wendell or the P. M. They can divide the responsibility between them as they please. We have no doubt Wendell was the villain. Nor does he care how well his villainy is established at home. If he can escape censure at head quarters, at home he will be proud of his successful frauds.

The Michigan State Journal, of Sept. 6th, has a long account of outrages committed on one Pardee Butler, in Kansas. Butler had expressed himself in favor of making Kansas a free State, for which crime he was painted black, ducked, and put afloat on a raft, on the Missouri River, with notice that if he returned they would hang him.—The act was done by Kelly, joint owner with Stringfellow of the "Squatter Sovereign," and a mob collected by him.

The following is from Mr. Butler's account of the transaction, as published in the Missouri Democrat:

The Squatter Sovereign is published at Atchison, Kansas territory, by J. H. Stringfellow and R. S. Kelly. The following editorial appeared in that paper, under date of July 31st.

Here follows a very violent article from the "Squatter Sovereign," denouncing all in favor of making Kansas a Free State as "Abolitionists," "horse-thieves," the "scum of the Eastern cities," &c., &c. The article goes on to say:

"We cannot feel safe while the air of Kansas is polluted with the breath of a single Free-Soiler. We are not safe; and self-preservation requires the total extermination of this set.

Let us act immediately, and with that decision that will convince these desperadoes that it is our firm determination to keep their dishonored feet from staining the fair carpet of Kansas.

"We propose a meeting to the friends of the South, which includes all the 'law and order' men in the Territory, where we may devise some way for protection against the depredations of our town, that their presence is no longer needed, and will not be tolerated."

A meeting was held, specially to request them to leave, threatening them with "hemp" if they did not. A committee was appointed to wait on them, &c.

He then details an attempt to compel him to sign the resolutions, on his refusal to do which they attempted a compromise by which his right to vote should be relinquished, or at least his mouth closed. Failing in both these attempts, after various indignities, he was put afloat on a raft, with a flag bearing the following inscription:

"EASTERN EMIGRANT AND EXPRESS."
The Rev. Mr. Butler, Agent for Underground Railroad.

THE WAY THEY ARE SERVED IN KANSAS.
FOR BOSTON.
Cargo insured, unavoidable danger of the Missourians and the Missouri River excepted. Let future emissaries from the North beware. Our Hemp crop is sufficient to reward such scoundrels.

Let no one attribute these abuses to Gen. Cass' doctrine of "popular sovereignty." It is the denial of the right of the people of Kansas to rule, that produces all this disorder. The invasion of Kansas by ruffians from Missouri, which is bringing the doctrine of popular sovereignty into disrepute.

Though the Rev. Pardee Butler is probably one of the same righteous men who call Mormons "horse-thieves and black-legs," as an excuse for driving them out of Missouri and Illinois, we cannot help feeling some sympathy for him, when he suffers in the same way. And we really have some hope that these good Christians from Yankee land will learn that this word "thief, black-leg, rascal," &c., when used against a whole community, is just equivalent to the old cry of "heretic."

When they learn these border blood-hounds a little better, will they remember to do justice to the Mormons, who were driven out of Illinois under the same cry? Will they recant their original invention of this cry, to excuse these same blood-hounds for expelling the Mormons from Missouri? We don't flatter ourselves that the Christians will.

Three boats are now employed constantly between this place and Pine River, carrying emigrants and their goods.

These emigrants are all bound for Lake Mormon, all the prominent positions around which are now occupied.

The Elders are preparing for their winter missions. The intention is to send about fifty on missions for the winter, and the present prospect is that it will be the most efficient mission yet sent out.

We have had no frost yet.—There has been a small second crop of strawberries and whortleberries, and choke cherry trees are again occasionally blossoming.

The newspapers are having a gala day over Mormon atrocities. Next year they will be whist as mice, and the Mormons will be very respectable citizens. Let a book of remembrance be written.

We have a few fine samples of the crops raised this year about Lake Mormon. It is a superior agricultural region.

Many are quoting against a prohibitory liquor law, the Mohammedan prohibition, and asserting that drunkenness is common in Mohammedan countries. This is an error. The sobriety of Musselmén, as compared to Christians, is attested by all Christian travelers in the orient.

But the success of prohibition there is attributable to religious sentiment, rather than statutory prohibition.

Bryant, the poet, who is now sojourning in the east, spoke of drunkenness, profanity, and adultery as new sins, scarcely known among Mohammedans until the late decay of their power.

The propensity of human nature to indulge in something intoxicating, with them, till lately, satiated itself with opium and coffee.

The attempt to build up a settlement at Pine River, hostile to the Mormons has been abandoned. Only one family remain there, and they are preparing to leave.

A PREACHER TURNED HORSE THIEF.

On Saturday night, officer Fox, in company with an officer from Kalamazoo, Michigan, arrested at Levi J. North's Circus, a man of clerical and dignified appearance, white cravat, black coat, etc., on a charge of horse stealing. It appears that this individual, who calls himself the Rev. S. J. Taylor, and who claims to be a preacher in good standing in the Methodist Church, hired a horse and buggy a few days since at Kalamazoo, to take a short ride into the country to preach. After proceeding about ten miles, he drove the buggy into a ditch, and broke off one of its wheels, and then took off the harness from the horse, filled a bag with prairie hay to answer for a saddle, and, mounting his steed, proceeded on his way toward Chicago, where he arrived on Saturday—in the meantime, however, selling his horse and pocketing the proceeds. On Saturday night, he visited the circus, and, as we have said, while enjoying the sports of the ring, was arrested and taken to the watch-house. On examining his person, a quantity of sermons, texts, skeletons of discourses, etc., were found upon him, and he offered to preach to the officers, upon any theme they might select, which offer was declined. He was sent back to Kalamazoo yesterday morning, in custody of the officer who came after him.—Chicago Tribune.

If he had been a Mormon, all the religious papers would publish his shame. As it is, not one.

[ED. ISLANDER.]
HAS THE SLAVE A RIGHT TO STEAL.

There were eight persons in the family. There was, each week, one half bushel of cornmeal brought from the mill; and in the kitchen, corn-meal was almost our exclusive food, for very little else was allowed us. Out of this half bushel of cornmeal, the family in the great house had a small loaf every morning; thus leaving us, in the kitchen, with not quite a half a peck of meal per week, a piece. This allowance was less than half the allowance of food on Lloyd's plantation. It was not enough to subsist upon; and we were, therefore, reduced to the wretched necessity of living at the expense of our neighbors.

We were compelled either to beg, or to steal, and we did both.

I frankly confess, that while I hated everything like stealing, as such, I nevertheless did not hesitate to take food, when I was hungry, wherever I could find it. Nor was this practice the mere result of an unreasoning instinct; it was, in my case, the result of a clear apprehension of the claims of morality.—I weighed and considered the matter closely, before I ventured to satisfy my hunger by such means.

Considering that my labor and person were the property of Master Thomas, and that I was by him deprived of the necessities of life—necessaries obtained by my own labor—it was easy to deduce the right to supply myself with what was my own. It was simply appropriating what was my own, to the use of my master, since the health and strength derived from such food were exerted in his service.—To be sure, this was stealing, according to the law and gospel that I heard from St. Michael's pulpit; but I had already begun to attach less importance to what dropped from that quarter, on that point, while, as yet, I retained my reverence for religion.

It was not always convenient to steal from master, and the same reason why I might, innocently, steal from him, did not seem to justify me in stealing from others. In the case of my master, it was only a question of removal—the taking his meat out of one tub, and putting it into another; the ownership of the meat was not affected by the transaction. At first, he owned it in the tub, and last he owned it in me.

His meat house was not always open. There was a strict watch kept on that point, and the key was on a large bunch in Rowena's pocket. A great many times have we, poor creatures, been severely pinched with hunger, when meat and bread have been moulding under the lock, while the key was in the pocket of our mistress. This had been so when she knew we were nearly half starved; and yet, the mistress, with saintly air, would kneel with her husband, and pray each morning that a merciful God would bless them in basket and in store, and save them, at last, in his kingdom.—But I proceed with the argument.

It was necessary that the right to steal from others should be established; and this could only rest upon a wider range of generalization than that which supposed the right to steal from my master.

It was some time before I arrived at this clear right. The reader will get some idea of my train of reasoning, by a brief statement of the case. "I am," thought I, "not only the slave of Master Thomas, but I am the slave of society at large. Society at large has bound itself, in form and in fact, to assist Master Thomas in robbing me of my rightful liberty, and of the just reward of my labor; therefore, whatever rights I have against Master Thomas, I have, equally, against those confederated with him in robbing me of liberty.—As society has marked me out as privileged plunder, on the principle of self-preservation, I am justified in plundering in turn. Since each slave belongs to all; all must, therefore, belong to each."

I shall here make a profession of faith which may shock some, offend others, and be dissented from by all. It is this: Within the bonds of his just earnings, I hold that the slave is fully justified in helping himself to the gold and silver, and the best apparel of his master, or that of any other slaveholder; and that such taking is not stealing in any just sense of that word.

The morality of free society can have no application to slave society. Slaveholders have made it almost impossible for the slave to commit any crime, known either to the laws of God or to the laws of man. If he steals, he takes his own; if he kills his master, he imitates only the heroes of the revolution. Slaveholders I hold to be individually and collectively responsible for all the evils that grow out of the horrid relation, and I believe they will be so held at the judgment in the sight of a just God. Make a man a slave, and you rob him of moral responsibility. Freedom of choice is the essence of all accountability. But my kind readers are, probably, less concerned about my opinions, than about that which more nearly touches my personal experience; albeit, my opinions have, in some sort, been formed by that experience.

FRED DOUGLASS.

STATE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

OFFICE OF SUP'T PUBLIC INSTRUCTION,
LANSING, AUGUST 7, 1855.

Applications in accordance with the provisions of law having been received at this Office from the following places, and their vicinities, and the same being regarded by this Department as eligible, the undersigned would hereby announce that a series of State Teachers' Institutes, to commence on the evening of the days named below, and to continue in session ten working days, severally, will be held as follows, viz:

At Detroit, beginning August 27th; at Rome, beginning September 10th; at Flint, beginning September 24th; at Grand Rapids, beginning October 1st; at Niles, beginning October 15th; at Coldwater, beginning October 22d.

UTILITY OF TEACHERS' INSTITUTES.

Teachers' Institutes have received the earnest approval of eminent Educators since their establishment in the country, nearly fifteen years ago. They constitute an efficient agency both in providing well trained teachers for the school room, and in cultivating an intelligent and active public sentiment in favor of Education. Wherever they have been properly conducted, the people have been awakened to a livelier interest in the education of their children, and a marked improvement in the character of the instruction given in our primary and higher schools, has been apparent.—That this series of State Teachers' Institutes may be productive of great public benefit, it is earnestly requested that all good citizens will lend whatever aid or influence they can to insure a full attendance of the Teachers of the State. And all persons contemplating the charge of Schools the ensuing season, it is hoped will avail themselves with alacrity of the benefits here offered, and attend some one of the Institutes from the beginning to the close of the session.

The Board of Instruction will be composed of able and experienced Teachers and Lecturers and will include Members of the Faculty of the Normal School, and of other literary institutions of the State.

LOCAL COMMITTEES.

It is desirable that a committee of active friends of the cause should be immediately appointed in each place where an Institute is to be held, with whom the undersigned may confer, and who may materially aid in making the necessary local arrangements for the successful prosecution of the enterprise.

LECTURES AND INSTRUCTIONS FREE.

All the expense which Teachers and others attending the Institutes will need to incur, will be for board, which in some instances I am assured will be at considerably reduced rates, and especially for ladies, of which due notice will be given by the Local Committee; or, at least, information may be had touching the matter by application to them.

IRA MAYHEW,
Sup't of Public Instruction.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns.
Mons de Laines and Barges.
Lawns, Shawls, &c.
A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish.
Book and Barred Muslins.
Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores.

Stoves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale. 63na.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES.

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST.

J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Nail-roads, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused.

He has also on hand a small assortment of Clocks, Watches, Jewelry, &c.

Saint James, June 19th, 1855. 70a90*

The Packet "Maid of the Mist" will make weekly trips from Saint James to Galien, Patmos, Charlevoix and Arbour Croche, carrying the mail. She has excellent accommodations for passengers.

THERE'S WORK ENOUGH TO DO.

The blackbird early leaves its nest
To meet the smiling dawn,
And gathering fragments for its nest,
From upland wood and lawn.
The busy bee that wings its way
Mid sweets of varied hue,
At every flower would seem to say—
"There's work enough to do."
The cowslip and the spreading vine,
The daisy in the grass,
The snow-drop and the eglantine,
Preach sermons as we pass.
The ant, within its cavern deep,
Would bid us labor, too,
And writes upon its tiny heap—
"There's work enough to do."
The planets, at their Maker's will,
Move onward in their cars,
For Nature's wheel is never still—Progressive as the stars.
The leaves that flutter in the air,
And summer's breezes woo,
One solemn truth to man declare—
"There's work enough to do."
Who then can sleep when all around
Is active, fresh and free?
Shall man—creation's lord—be found
Less busy than the bee?
Our courts and alleys are the field,
If men would search them through,
That best the sweets of labor yield,
And "work enough to do."
To have a heart for those who weep,
The sordid drunkard win;
To rescue all the children, deep
In ignorance and sin;
To help the poor, the hungry feed,
To give him coat and shoe;
To see that all can write and read—
Is "work enough to do."
The time is short—the world is wide,
And much has to be done;
This wondrous earth and all its pride,
Will vanish with the sun.
The moments fly on lightning's wings,
And life's uncertain too;
We've none to waste on foolish things—
"There's work enough to do."

GIVE THEM ROPE.

The following report and bill are a specimen of the legislation of Atchison and his gang of ruffians, now playing the fool at Shawnee Mission:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill entitled "a bill to punish persons decoying slaves from their masters," respectfully report, they have had the same for some time under advisement, and recognizing the correctness of the provisions of the act, but one question has occupied the attention of the Committee, and that is the character of the punishment prescribed in the bill. At first presentation of the subject, there was an apparent severity which seemed not to be in consonance with the crime, and viewing the offence in the light of grand larceny alone, the genius of our institutions and the prejudices of the day in which we live, at once discard so extreme a punishment.

But when we view the offence in its peculiar bearings upon our institutions at this particular time, it assumes more the character of treason against the laws than an ordinary crime which but affects the immediately interested, or in the immediate community in which the offence may have been committed, and may, in its incendiary tendencies, lead to consequences of the most fearful character, as well upon our political as social institutions. It is an offence, the frequent recurrence of which we may well imagine, might light the bonfires of a civil war, and result in bloodshed more fearful than a thousand murders. We are, therefore, in view of this, prepared to sanction the penalty of death, and most respectfully recommend the passage of the act.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. R. REES, Chm.

AN Act to punish persons decoying slaves from their masters.

Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of Kansas Territory:

Section 1. If any persons entice, decoy, or carry away out of this Territory, any slave belonging to another, with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the services of such slave, or with intent to effect or procure the freedom of such slave, he shall be adjudged guilty of grand larceny, and on conviction thereof shall suffer death.

Sec. 2. If any person shall aid or assist in enticing, decoying, or persuading, or carrying away, or sending out of this Territory any slave belonging to another, with intent to procure or effect the freedom of such slave, or with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the services of such slave, he shall be adjudged guilty of grand larceny, and on conviction thereof shall suffer death.

Sec. 3. If any person shall entice, decoy, or carry away out of any State or other Territory of the United States, any slave belonging to another, with intent to procure or effect the freedom of such slave, or to deprive the owner thereof of the services of such slave, and shall bring such slave into this Territory, he shall be adjudged guilty of grand larceny, in the same manner as if such slave had been enticed, decoyed or carried away out of this Territory, in such case the larceny may be charged to have been committed in any county of this Territory into or through which such slave shall have been brought by such person, and, on conviction thereof, the person offending shall suffer death.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Democrat, writing from Shawnee, says of the above bill:

During my absence last week a bill making negro-stealing a capital offence was passed by the Council, and is now in the hands of a House Committee. When it is recollected that in such case the evidence of negroes is admitted, this act will excite wide-spread astonishment. The lives of no citizens are safe against the hate of any slaveholder who chooses to instruct his negroes to commit perjury. Unless extraordinary pains are taken in trials for such cases, this act may yet lead to many cold-blooded official murders.

Boys of the North, how does this suit you? Who will go to Kansas and teach the fools that such enactments are not laws?—We can, in a walk of fifteen minutes, find a dozen who need but hear the rallying cry and they will go to Kansas and trample on all such enactments, and teach such murderers there is a higher law, and a power to execute. Why not go and turn all the slaves free?

PHYSIOLOGICAL EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.

In small doses tobacco causes heat or burning in the throat, a sensation of warmth in the stomach, followed by nausea and giddiness. In large doses it produces retching, vomiting and purging, and a most distressing sinking feeling at the pit of the stomach, followed by languor, relaxation of the muscular system, trembling of the limbs, extreme anxiety and great tendency to faint, vision is obscure, the ideas are confused, the pulse is small and weak, the perspiration laborious, the surface cold and clammy or bathed in a cold sweat, and frequently convulsions occur.

In very large doses all these symptoms are manifested with more violence, and are followed by paralysis and stupor, terminating in death. These general effects are manifested very similarly whether the article is chewed, smoked, snuffed or swallowed. In the form of snuff, however, small portions only occasion an increased flow of mucus, sneezing, and an acrid and burning sensation in the throat.

When tobacco is used habitually in any form, all of its most violent and striking effects are gradually diminished in degrees, until finally they cease to be apparent, and when the organic instincts are thoroughly subdued by its influence, its impressions become pleasurable, and ultimately a wonderful charm, a strange exhilaration, a mysterious spell, an absolute fascination pervades the whole domain of sense, and binds the organic sensibilities, and with them the moral emotions and intellectual powers in a servitude which, in some cases, grows stronger and more irrevocable during the remainder of life, and terminates only with death.

The great grand parent of vices in the way of the world's reformation are alcohol and tobacco.—They waste human energies and destroy human talents equal to war, pestilence and famine, which, in fact, they engender and beget.—Crescent.

We publish the following bill of sale, and Gov. Doty's letter accompanying it, to show our readers how near here African slavery has found footing:

From the Milwaukee Sentinel.

A DOCUMENT FOR HISTORY.

The bill of sale of a negro named Frank, (who for a time was at Prairie du Chien, and then at Mackinac,) is the hand writing of Thomas H. Benton, of which the following is a copy, was found among the papers of the late Michael Dousman, at Mackinac.

Frank, it is stated, after the sale by Mr. Benton, was taken across the river from Missouri into Illinois, and there bound by "articles of apprenticeship," according to the laws of that Territory, to serve for a term of years. Under these he was brought to this country, then a part of Illinois, and was held to service several years, but he left this for a country of greater liberty than the one which was governed by the ordinance of 1787; the slave of another country found no freedom here.

Is this "climate" more favorable to slavery than that of Kansas or Nebraska? A similar transaction occurred in this State after it became a separate Territory.

This is the first warrantee I have met with that property was "sensible." And, it is suggested, the form of this instrument may be useful to the legal profession, if slavery exists, as Judge Kane intimates it does, in States in which it has been abolished.

J. D. DOTY.

BILL OF SALE.

To whom it may concern:

KNOW YE, that for and in consideration of the sum of seven hundred dollars to me in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I THOMAS H. BENTON, of St. Louis, have bargained, sold and delivered to Benjamin Jordan of St. Louis, a certain NEGRO MAN SLAVE named Frank, age nineteen years, to have and to hold to the said Benjamin Jordan forever. And I warrant the said slave Frank to be sound, healthy and sensible, and free from any bodily defect or infirmity whatever, and will forever warrant and defend the right and title of the said slave to the said Benjamin Jordan, his heirs or assigns, against [all] claimants whatever. In witness of which I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this twenty-seventh day of November, 1846.

T. H. BENTON. [SEAL.]

Test.
W. CHRISLY,
TAYLOR BERRY.

THE LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF A SAILOR'S LIFE.

A correspondent of a Nantucket paper describes, in a truthful and impressive manner, the anxieties and hardships of a sailor's life, as follows:

A few days ago a man was speaking to me of the emotions with which he was overwhelmed when he bade adieu to his family on the last voyage. The ship in which he was to sail was at Edgartown, on Martha's Vineyard.—

The packet was at the wharf which was to convey him from Nantucket to the ship. He went down in the morning and saw all his private sea-stores packed away in the sloop, and then returned to his home, to take leave of his wife and children.

His wife was sitting at the fireside, struggling in vain to restrain her tears. She had an infant a few months old, in her arms, and with her foot was rocking the cradle, in which lay another little daughter, about three years of age, with her cheeks flushed with a burning fever. No pen can describe the anguish of such a parting. It is almost like the bitterness of death. The departing father imprinted a kiss upon the cheek of his child. Four years will pass away ere he will again take that child in his arms. Leaving his wife sobbing in anguish, he closes the door of his home behind him. Four years must elapse ere he crosses that threshold again.

A lady said to me, a few evenings ago, "I have been married eleven years, and counting all the days my husband has been at home since our marriage, it amounts to but three hundred and sixty days. He is now absent, having been gone fifteen months; and two years and two months must undoubtedly elapse before I can see his face again; and when he does return, it will be merely a visit to his family for a few months, when he will again bid them adieu for another four years' absence."

I asked the lady, the other day, how many letters she wrote to her husband during his last voyage.

"One hundred," was the answer.

"And how many did he receive?"

"Six."

The invariable rule is to write by every ship that leaves the port of New Bedford, or any other port, that may be heard of, for the Pacific ocean. And yet the chances are very small that any two ships will meet on this boundless expanse. It sometimes happens that a ship returns, when those on board have not heard one word from their families, during the whole period of their absence.

Imagine, then, the feelings of a husband and father who returns to the harbor of Nantucket after the separation of forty-eight months, during which time he has heard no tidings whatever from home. He sees the boat pushing off from the wharves which is to bring him the tidings of weal or woe. Pale and trembling, he paces the deck with emotions which he endeavors to conceal. A friend in the boat greets him with a smile, and says:

"Captain, your family are all well." Or, perhaps, he says, "Captain, I have heavy news for you; your wife died two years and a half ago."

A young man left this island last summer, leaving in his quiet home a young and beautiful wife and infant child. The wife and child are both now in the grave. But the husband knows not, and probably will not know of it for some months to come. He perhaps falls asleep every night, thinking of the loved ones left at his fireside, little imagining that they are both cold in death.

On a bright summer afternoon the telegraph announces that a Cape horn ship has appeared in the horizon, and immediately the stars and stripes of our national banner are unfurled from our flag-staff, sending a wave of emotion through the town. Many families are hoping that it is the ship in which their friends are to return, and all are hoping for tidings from the absent.

Soon the name of the ship is announced; and then there is an eager contention with the boys to be the first bearer of the joyful tidings to the captain, for which service a silver dollar is the established and invariable fee.

Who can describe the feelings which must agitate the bosom of a wife? Perhaps she has heard no tidings of the ship for more than a year. Trembling with excitement, she dresses herself to meet her husband. "Is he alive?" she says to herself, "or am I a widow, and the poor children orphans?" She walks about the room, unable to compose herself sufficiently to sit down; eagerly is she looking out of the window and down the street. She sees a man with hurried step turn the corner, and a little boy hold of his hand. Yes, it is he. And her little son has gone down to the boat and found his father. Or, perhaps, instead of this, she sees two of her neighbors returning slowly and sadly, and directing their steps to her door.—The blood flows back to her heart. They rap at the door. It is the knell of her husband's death; and she falls senseless to the floor, as they tell her that her husband has long since been entombed in the fathomless ocean.

This is no fiction. These are not extreme cases, which the imagination creates. They are facts of continual occurrence; facts which awaken emotions to which no pen can do justice.

THE RAINING TREE.

The Island of Fierro is one of the most considerable of the Canaries, and the name is supposed to be given it upon this account—that its soil not affording so much as a drop of fresh water, seems to be iron, and indeed there is in this Island neither river nor rivulet, nor well nor spring, save that only toward the seaside there are some wells, but they lie at such a distance from the city that the inhabitants can make no use thereof.

But the great Preserver and Sustainer of all remedies this inconvenience by a way so extraordinary that man will be forced to acknowledge that he gives in this an undeniable demonstration of his wonderful goodness. For in the midst there is a tree which is the only one of the kind, inasmuch as it has no resemblance to any of those known to us in Europe. The leaves are long and narrow, and continue in constant verdure, winter and summer and its branches are covered with a cloud, which is never dispelled, but resolving into a moisture, causes to fall from its leaves a very clear water, and that in such abundance that the cisterns which are placed at the foot of the tree to receive it are never empty, but contain enough to supply both man and beast.

IMPORTANCE OF PUNCTUATION.

Punctuation not only serves to make an author's meaning plain, but often saves us from being entirely misconceived. There are many cases in which a change of points completely alters the sentiment.

An English statesman once took advantage of this fact, to free himself from an embarrassing position. Having charged an officer of government with dishonesty, he was required by Parliament, under a heavy penalty, publicly to retract the accusation in the House of Commons. At the appointed time he appeared with a written recantation, which he read aloud, as follows: "I said he was dishonest; it is true; and I am sorry for it." This was satisfactory; but what was the surprise of Parliament, the following day, to see the retraction printed in the paper thus: "I said he was dishonest; it is true, and I am sorry for it."—By a simple transposition of the comma and semicolon, the ingenious slanderer represented himself to the country, not only as having made no recantation, but even as having reiterated the charge in the very face of Parliament.—Quaek-embos' Composition and Rhetoric.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 18.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, OCT. 11, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 80.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

at St. James, Beaver Island, Lakes Michigan, by

COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to Cooper & Chidester, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Saint James, July 4th, '55.

DEAR BROTHER:—In my last I closed in a brief relation of the manner in which Alpheus Cutler supplanted me in a contract, for a large amount of building.

This left me in a situation that I knew not what to do, as it was getting too late in the season to pitch a crop. I was also destitute of the means of subsistence. In this crisis there was something necessary to be done. I had five wagons, and not teams sufficient to haul them, since the loss of my cattle, that were stolen at Winter Quarters. I therefore sold one yoke of oxen and a wagon, on the avails of which we subsisted for the time being.

About this time Joseph Kelting and Richard Hewett came down from Winter Quarters, expecting to get employment on the building they supposed I had undertaken. I told them of the failure in getting the work, on account of Cutler's treachery, and that I had seriously contemplated going to Texas, and took up my son, John F. Miller, that had gone off with Lyman Wight, as I had recently learned his whereabouts. They proposed going part way with me, and in two or three days we departed for the Cherokee Indian Nation, as it was represented as a good place for mechanical and other labor.

We took what is called the line road, having the Indian territory on our west and the State of Missouri on the east. We prosecuted our journey without any serious difficulty, and when we got to Maysville, a small village on the west line of Arkansas, we oblied to the right, taking the Port Gibson road, and on the 9th day of July, 1847, arrived at Tahlequah, the Capitol of the Cherokee Nation.

Upon our arrival here I looked around a day or two for work. I had a great many applications to do several kinds of mechanical labor, at good prices. I went to work, not losing a day. I in a short time became quite popular among the Cherokees, on account of my close attention to my labors.

The brothers Hewett and Kelting proposed to me that we should have meetings every Sunday at one of our houses, (or my tent, as I then lived in one.) The first meeting we held was at Hewett's, and only our own folks in attendance; but before the end of our services two white men came in, one a Methodist preacher, and the other a merchant. They both had well-bred wives, and solicited me to preach in the Court House; that I could occupy the house once every Sunday, either forenoon, afternoon, or at candle lighting. I assented to their request, and on the next Sunday had a large congregation in the Court House; and from this time onward I became the popular preacher. These things moved on smoothly through the summer and fall, and after the session of the Cherokee Legislature I was solicited by them to preach twice a week. My compliance with this request created a clamor and jealousy among the missionaries and teachers in their seminaries, some of them having been among the Cherokees over thirty years.

They sent in a petition to the principal chief, setting forth that they had been preachers and teachers among them all their best days; had grown old in their service, and always been faithful to their interests; that they had educated their Legislators and Statesmen, and, for the interest they had taken against the U. S. in behalf of the Cherokees, were identified as of them, and had no country or interest aside from the Cherokees; and when I preached I had crowded houses, and they had to speak to the empty walls; and, furthermore, the Legislature had never called on them to preach, notwithstanding the services they had rendered the nation; and I, a stranger holding heterodox principles, could preach to crowded houses, and receive the caresses of the principal men of the nation. They therefore prayed that my preaching be stopped.

I was confidentially told that the chief informed the petitioners that he could not constitutionally grant their prayer. After being apprised by a friend of what was going on, and having but a short time to stay, I gradually broke off preaching.

In the course of the summer and fall my son, myself and the female part of my family, earned twelve hundred dollars, and received the pay; and having finished my contracts, except some things of minor importance, which I turned over to Kelting and Hewett, I, on the 15th day of December, 1847, loaded my wagons and started for Texas. The Indians did not wish to give me up; but having laid my plan, and having now means in abundance to prosecute my journey, I would not yield to their solicitations.

My journey was not characterized by any remarkable occurrence, until I got into Texas. I however had beautiful dry weather the entire extent of my journey. I passed through the Creek, Seminole, Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian territory. I will not leave this country without giving it a passing notice. In point of soil, climate, mineral and agricultural products, it will rank above Arkansas.

The face of the country is undulating, and in some places mountainous. The soil is productive in wheat, rye, oats, cotton, rice and maize, (or Indian corn,) better than southern Missouri and Arkansas, and more highly cultivated; and in regard to refinement in civil society, and institutions of learning, an age before them.

The hand of Almighty God seems to have favored this region of country. Beside iron ore, and bituminous coal, saline springs or wells abound so as to make salt in great abundance for the immediate wants of those Indian nations, as also for all south-western Missouri, western Arkansas, and all northern Texas. Timber and stone for building abundant, and not surpassed by any country in point of water powers.

We crossed the Red River at the village of Warren, in Texas, passing down from the sources of the Trinity River, to the Cedar Springs about four miles above Dallas. The part of Texas that I passed through, lying between Warren and Dallas, is the most densely populated of any part of the State, and under a better state of cultivation, and susceptible of sustaining more people than the same area of any other given portion of that country. This part of Texas is unhealthy from some cause, not apparent from its face, as the country is undulating and little or no swamp or wet land, unless it may be on the bottoms, or margin of the large water courses.

The country from Dallas to the falls of the Rio Brasos is very thinly settled, and in fact cannot be otherwise than sparsely populated for the lack of wood and water. When I passed through there was but one house on the road, a distance of one hundred miles. In the vicinity of the falls of the Rio Brasos is the village of Bucksnort, with settlements up and down the river.

On crossing the Brasos I entered upon a region of country destitute of water, and although I crossed two or three valleys where large bodies of water run in the rainy season I did not get water for our teams till I reached Little River, a distance of forty miles. At this place my cattle began to fail, taking a disease that all northern raised cattle are liable to. They are attacked with stupidity and high fever, urinating frequently, passing apparently nothing but blood. The disease terminates in the death of the animal in about three days.

When we arrived at the city of Austin, I had yet alive, out of my entire stock, consisting of ten yoke of oxen, eight cows and calves, and one horse—but four yoke of oxen and three cows. At this point I ascertained that my son lived west about seventy-five miles, and no house intervening. I ferried the Colorado River at this point, and the first night lost one cow and a yoke of oxen. There I left a wagon, and divided its load among the other three, and as my family until this time had rode in the wagons, they now walked on foot, from the least to the greatest.

After having gone about thirty-five miles from the city of Austin, I could go no further, for the want of teams to draw my wagons. I therefore sent up to Lyman Wight, and my son for teams to haul my wagons, and their contents to his place, and according to my request my son came down to my camp with teams, and some additional wagons, to haul us and our effects. On the arrival of my son I had but four head of cattle remaining out of thirty-six, the whole number of cattle with which I crossed Red River, and in a few days after but one survived.

The cause of the mortality among the cattle reared east and north of Red River, upon being taken into Texas, I could not myself or ever heard any one else satisfactorily account for. The malady is not alone confined to horned or black cattle, but to horses also. However horses have a different kind of disease, called Spanish fever, and in acclimating more than half the number die; but not exceeding one out of ten of cows and oxen survive a year after coming to the country.

Native cattle are generally fine looking, and very healthy. And with ordinary industry and care no portion of the United States is better suited for the growing of every kind of cattle. The grazing being perpetual, and acclimated stock uniformly healthy. The greater portion of Texas is better suited to pasturage than any other place I have a knowledge of, and with proper care and little labor a frugal man may grow into boundless wealth in herds and flocks, having no necessity for winter stores to keep them.

There is however care required on account of the numerous insects incident to all low climates, excoriating the skin of animals. There is a fly that deposits an egg, which in a few hours will hatch into a maggot, that sometimes endangers the life of the animal, if not seen to in time. The means of a comfortable subsistence can be easily secured by a very small amount of labor and attention. All the hill part of Texas is healthy, keeping off the large creeks and rivers; but never can be densely populated for the lack of timber and water.

On the sea coast, and the distance of a hundred miles or more inland, the country is badly watered, and generally unhealthy, and lacking timber, but not to the same extent as the part just spoken of. The country now under consideration, although a good grazing region, the whole extent coastwise and a hundred miles inland, contains the agricultural wealth of the State, beginning with the Rivers Trinity, Brasos, Colorado, Gaudaloupe, San Antonio, Nueces and Rio Grand, (common to Texas and Mexico,) together with all the minor streams flowing into the Gulf of Mexico, are the sugar, cotton and rice growing portion of Texas.

The plantations are all cultivated by negro slave labor. The yield of sugar (although this article could be raised to any extent so far as climate is concerned) is barely sufficient for the wants of the inhabitants, and in many instances, large quantities are imported. This lack no doubt is altogether attributable to the want of capital among the planters; and, like all other countries where slave labor is wholly resorted to, the growth in wealth and individual enterprise is comparatively slow, and always a half century or more behind the countries where free hired laborers are employed to conduct their agricultural interests.

In contemplating the natural resources of the country, its susceptibility of producing the grape, mulberry tree, lemons, oranges, figs, almonds, olives, peach and apricots to any extent, almost in the range of human comprehension, and if under a system of good husbandry, would undoubtedly abound in silk, wine and oil, tropical fruits, milk and honey. The honey bee abounds in all Texas, and wherever you meet with timber and hollow trees, or crevices in the rocks, you can most generally find the bee and honey.

And in all my travels from the Rio Trinity River to the Nueces coastwise, and from the latter to Red River north-east, I rarely found fruit of any kind, and four-fifths of the entire population in my observation had not a fruit tree of any kind, or an ornamental tree or shrub about them.

Beans of every kind may be raised to great perfection. Sweet potatoes, peanuts, cucumbers and melons of every variety cannot be excelled in any country. Other edible roots and plants are inferior in quality and quantity to those grown in the other States of the union.

It is a frequent occurrence, in traveling through the country, that you may for a week not meet with a vegetable of any kind at the table of any person. Their uniform diet being meat, bread and coffee; no butter or milk, although they may have from ten to five hundred, or even a thousand cows and calves. Poultry can easily be raised to a great extent, as they have no winter to prevent the laying, setting and hatching of all fowls that lay more than one brood of eggs in the year, and you may find hens' eggs at all times of the year, at every house where you find hens. Having said some things in regard to the natural and physical resources of this country, I again resume my narrative.

After getting to my son's house, who was living in a common stock association of some hundred and fifty persons, under the control of Lyman Wight, in the vicinity of a German Domain at any, located in the un- region of Texas, on a tributary of the Colorado River, called Piedernalles, signifying in the Spanish language, Stony River, in the county of Gillespie.

This community had a grist and saw mill, which they had but six or nine months before my arrival got into full operation. They had also a turning lathe, blacksmith and wagon shop, together with comfortable houses. They furnished me a house until such time as I could build me one, which I accomplished in about two months. They extended every kind of hospitality and aid in helping me build a cabin or cabins suitable for the convenience of my family.

Wight's company seemed to be in a prosperous condition, but were in debt to merchants in the city of Austin some two thousand dollars or thereabouts; and with all their industry the debt seemed to be growing larger, owing to Wight's bad financial management.

They made overtures to me to join their association, which I declined, but however let them have the use of my wagons and other property, and money to a small amount, amounting in all to eight hundred and sixty dollars, and putting our labor with theirs until such time as I could make it convenient to leave them and go by myself.

I soon became convinced that Lyman Wight had become addicted to drinking that he would, if persisted in, destroy himself, and bring ruin upon his community. He had also misled them by false teaching in regard to lineage and the laws of matrimony, and many other things.

I took the liberty of speaking to Lyman Wight and some few of his adherents in regard to the corruption and errors they were running into, not doubting but I could convince them without getting their ill will; but I soon found my mistake, and had it made doubly manifest to me that by a multitude of transgressions of the laws that God has given for the purifying and guidance of his people, the transgressors will lose the spirit that directs the mind to all truth, and become wholly darkened, and will invariably persecute those that point out to them their errors with the most bitter feelings.

It was so with Lyman Wight and a number of his followers. From this time forward Lyman would, by innuendos, allude to the facts that I had in a friendly way advised them to abstain from. I plainly saw the hand writing on the wall, and fully discovered that the war was in.

And in the early part of the month of August I began to make arrangements to go by myself. And upon naming my intention to Wight, he flatly told me that I could not have a particle of my property; that whenever any one apostatized from the church, (as he called himself and followers,) that they should go out empty.

I told him that I had not joined his association, which he very well knew, and that I would have the things I had brought there, less the expense of the teams to move me up to his place. He said he would call a meeting to take the matter under advisement. In the result of their deliberations they decided that if I left them I should go away empty. My son John, who had married Wight's daughter, siding with them.

I told them I was going if I walked and carried my family on my back, and I then warned them that I would have even more worth than they were—namely, combining to rob me of; that if I had covenanted or agreed to join their association, I would not draw back; but as I had not, I wanted them to distinctly understand that I was after them with warm cloths and hot blocks and sharp sticks, until I got the last cent. They defied me, and urged me to go ahead.

I went to the Dutch colony and hired teams to haul my family, as I had very little of anything else to haul. I learned that Lyman Wight, lest I might bring evil upon them, had sent some men after me to waylay and assassinate me on the way, urging that it was better for one man to die than a whole community to be mobbed and suffer; and one man preceded me to Austin, to advertise the people against me as a renegade. But I however went ahead, not knowing where I should stop. I had promised the teamsters that I would pay them in corn; and in the city of Austin I ascertained that I could buy corn of a Mr. Glasscock, if I would dig in a mill race by the yard to pay for it, at a very low price. But I could do no better, therefore went on a distance of twenty-five or thirty miles and commenced operations, thereby paying the teamsters for hauling me down, or rather across the country to this place.

I now again resorted to living in tents—had no wagons or any thing else to help myself with. But in a short time Wight sent me an inferior light wagon and a span of mules, to help myself with; and after two or three months of the most excessive labor by myself and boys, we accumulated a little stock of provisions and three or four cows and calves, and cutting mill race sufficient to pay for hauling my family to this place, and pay for the stock I had on hand, and fifteen dollars over, I told my employer that on account of the sickness of my son Joshua and nephew, that I would have to seek other employment.

He told me that he calculated on my finishing all his digging, amounting to four or five hundred dollars, and that he would not have employed me at all if he had not supposed that I would finish the job. I told him that I had taken no definite amount of yards to cut; that I had been cutting his mill race by the yard, at the rate of nine cents the cubic yard, and that he had paid me for the most part I had done, as we had agreed, and the expense of my family and their ill health would not permit me to prosecute his work any further.

He said I could get a house in the neighborhood to shelter my family, and if I abandoned his work he would prosecute me for damages. I told him I had no one to work but myself, and it took all my time to take care of my sick, and therefore could work for him no longer.

I therefore moved off twenty-five miles to a place where I expected to raise a crop the ensuing year, and adopt some mode of living without the toil of digging in a mill race for my daily bread. But my tyrant employer made good his word, and attached my wagon and team to secure the damages.

I went to see a lawyer, who informed me that the whole matter was illegal, and that he would bind himself to set it all aside for the fee of fifty dollars, if I would secure him in the payment of his fee; that Glasscock was a rich man, and had great influence, and although he might recover damages for me he would have to fight for it to the last bat's end, and that he could not work for nothing, and as the property attached was worth only about a hundred dollars, together with the fifteen dollars he owed me on my work. Glasscock told me that Wight had cautioned him to watch me, and he was bound to do it.

I abandoned the whole concern, as I could get no security to aid me in the prosecution of my suit. Glasscock afterwards sent me about ten or fifteen dollars worth of groceries.

I now had shanties or cabins to build to shelter me from the weather, as the rainy season had fully set in, and my tents worn out; and to augment my perplexity, I had no team to aid me, only as I hired it. And if ever a man had suffering and privation, I think a large share fell to my lot.

In the month of February, about the time of planting my corn, my wife Mary had a stroke of palsy, that made her as helpless as an infant, all attributable to Lyman Wight's cruelty towards me. I sent my son Joshua after my son John, who had married Wight's daughter, a distance of a hundred and twenty miles, to come and see his mother, as she wished to see him, and did not expect to survive the shock of her then sickness.

But John did not come, on account of some preventing cause. In about a week from this time I came to the conclusion to go to the city of Austin and seek employment as a builder, and therefore employed teams to haul my family and effects down to the city; and the second day, on my way down to my destination, I met my son John, and Wight's son Orange L. Wight, with a message from Lyman and his association that if I would return and take possession of a farm they had, with the growing crops, about eight miles from their residence, of near a hundred acres cultivation, that they would assist me with teams and provisions, together with a sufficient number of men to cultivate the crop, and give me the half of it, and also reimburse me in property for that which they had taken from me by violence and force, until I should be satisfied.

I accordingly agreed to accede to the proposal, and on getting to the city of Austin I discharged my wagons that I employed to move me and pitched a tent, where I remained five days, until my son John and O. L. Wight came with wagons and teams to take us up to Wight's camp.

A few days after getting to Wight's place I learned that a number of his company had left him since I had been there, but they were better off in their pecuniary interests than when I left them.

I discovered a disposition in Wight to procrastinate the compliance of his late agreement with me, and a proposal was hinted to me that if I would join their association that it would be made greatly to my interest to do so.

I went to Wight, after fully weighing the whole matter in my mind, and plainly told him of his conduct and cruelty toward me and family, and that my wife had been victimized on account of it, and if he did not comply with the agreement, that I would take vengeance and inflict punishment upon him for all the wrongs that I had suffered at his hands, and that I would do it in a summary way.

He without further delay, complied with his agreement, or put things in a way of compliance, and I fully engaged all my time with my utmost energy and skill to gather about me the means of comfort. But when I came to look about me, and fully realize the distracted condition of the church in their scattered situation without a shepherd, that I knew of, I felt in my heart that I was a mourner, and became almost weary of life. While in this state of mind I had a dream, in which I saw Joseph Smith in the heavens in a glorified state, together with countless numbers of glorified beings, shouting hallelujah, praising God and the Lamb, and bidding me welcome to the celestial abode.

A thin veil separated us, and their brilliancy was whiter and brighter than the sun. Joseph spoke to me, and told me that if I would come I might, but I had best not come, as my work was not yet finished on earth. At this time the spirit of praising God came upon me, and I shouted, whereupon part of my family, having not retired to bed, hearing me, supposed I had the night mare, and pulled me from my bed. When I awoke my eyes were so affected from the light I had seen that I could not for a time distinguish the surrounding objects.

On another occasion I had a dream that I saw Joseph Smith sitting in a room, talking to a person, who I have since seen. Upon my entering the room, he (Joseph) looked at me, saying, God bless you, brother Miller. I am instructing my successor in the prophetic office, how to manage and conduct the affairs of the church. The appearance of the personage shown me by Joseph Smith, in this dream, was so stamped on my mind that I could not keep it from my view for a single moment, and I was secretly whispered that I should soon hear news that would cheer my drooping spirit.

Most truly and sincerely,
GEORGE MILLER.

Mr. Strang has handed us the following correspondence for publication:

Beaver Island—Mormon Bloomers—Strang the "Saint."

Correspondence of the (Rock) Daily Democrat, BEAVER ISLAND, Mich., Aug. 15, '55.

This island has an excellent harbor, and is 12 miles long and 8 broad. Its exports are wood, potatoes and fish. Its imports, Mormonism, from all parts of the globe—mostly females. If they bring chastity with them, it is soon lost, for polygamy is an article "in the creed" here, as well as in Utah. The population is about 800—from the small beginning some six years ago of 30. The women wear the bloomer costume, and many of them are very fine looking, some of them well educated. They are from most every State in the Union, and a large number from the factory districts of Great Britain. Some come here with considerable funds—some are runaway daughters—some have rid themselves of their husbands, and got here in some manner. It is a good place to find abandoned wives, if they are worth looking after.

Strang, an educated, cunning lawyer, with a thorough knowledge of human nature, and withal a "Philadelphia lawyer," is the monarch "of all he surveys." His first wife resides in Wisconsin. He has particular favor to two women here, by whom he has children. Strang resides near the wharf. He is postmaster and editor of the newspaper, in which he defends the order.

Not a being resides on the island except the "Saints"—a Gentile cannot stay among them. Lately a fisherman, not of the "faithful," went among them, and met with a horrid murder.

Strang was a member of the Baltimore Convention in 1840, to nominate a candidate for the Presidency, and is now one of the hard shell democracy, and also a member of the Michigan Legislature. Just before election, he writes to the Cass gentlemen, at Detroit, to know how many votes they require to carry the district for Judge or any other office. As he is inspector of elections for his town and returning officer, he can furnish the requisite amount, even if the number amounts to more people of all ages than there is on the island. A "blessed saint" he is to the party. Michigan will, in the end, have much trouble with these people, but as long as demagogues purchase their votes, agreeing not to molest them, they may go on swimmingly. He has been indicted several times. On one occasion the revenue cutter, with loaded cannon, had to go to take him, but he got clear on trial, as he has many times since. R. M. A.

Mr. Strang's Reply.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, }
October 4th, 1855. }

Editors of the Monroe Democrat:—My attention has been called to a communication in the Democrat of August 23d, signed "R. M. A." and headed, "BEAVER ISLAND—MORMON BLOOMERS—STRANG THE 'SAINT,'" containing some pretended information concerning the Mormons in general, and myself in particular, which, perhaps, calls for more than a mere passing notice from me. Possibly I have as little disposition to falsify the facts as your correspondent "R. M. A." and a good deal more means of knowing the truth.

Of notoriety, you will readily believe that I have more than I desire; and as to defending the Mormons from the numerous vices which rumor, with her thousand tongues, charges them with, I know as well as any one how vain the task. I confess to some natural sensitiveness as to the public opinion of myself. Since becoming a Mormon I have made some effort, with what success I can hardly say, to content myself with the prospect of living and dying hated. Whether content or not, I have no hope of avoiding that fate.

Still that natural love of truth, of which I hope no man is quite divested, rather calls for some correction from me of errors so gross as some of those of your correspondent.

I have no doubt many persons prefer to all things some account of "Mormon atrocities," but I cannot but think that many of your readers would regret the falsification of history for so small a gratification.

The Beaver Islands, with an export trade in wood, potatoes and fish amounting to three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars during the last year, do import something besides Mormons; and the population capable of sustaining itself at cutting cord wood, raising potatoes and catching and curing fish, is made up of something besides lewd females and their paramours.

The Mormon settlements of this region are not confined to Beaver Island. They extend to the whole Beaver and Fox Island groups, which, with the two Manitue Islands, constitute the new county of Manitue, and sparsely over the southern half of Emmet county, the north half being in the hands of Ottawa Indians.

These settlements, by the official census of May, 1854, contain a population of four thousand nine hundred and seventy-one, of whom two thousand four hundred and forty-seven are males, and two thousand five hundred and twenty-four females. Excess of females seventy-seven, or as sixty-four females to sixty-three males.

The quantity of fish caught, packed, inspected and exported during the year preceding the 1st of May, 1854, was, by the official returns, thirty-three thousand eight hundred and sixty-three barrels, of two hundred pounds to the barrel, worth at this place $7.00 per barrel, or the snug sum of $237,041. Rather a handsome export to be produced by a population which your correspondent scales down to eight hundred, consisting principally of lewd women.

The statement of "R. M. A." that a large portion of the population are from the "factory districts" of England, is of no consequence, except as showing a utter ignorance of the matter. From my personal acquaintance throughout the Mormon settlements, I am warranted in saying that there is but one family here, raised in England, and that consisting of an old bachelor and a widowed sister, who have resided in Pittsburgh twenty years, and five here. The population is more purely American than any north-western settlement of the same extent in the range of my acquaintance.

The assertion that a portion of the population is made up of "runaway daughters" and women who have "rid themselves of their husbands," is simply false. There is not nor ever has been a runaway daughter among the Mormons, in Manitue and Emmet counties. "R. M. A." cannot name a case, for the simple reason that none ever existed.

Since the commencement of the Mormon settlement here, in 1847, three runaway wives have reached here. Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Coltrin, from Parma, and Mrs. Beebe, from Thetford, Mich. The Mormons gave them no countenance.

Mrs. Brown married a fish trader, not a Mormon, and went to Kenosha, Wisconsin. The other two were followed by their husbands, and by the advice of the Mormons returned with them.— Besides these three I have never heard of a runaway wife in the Mormon settlements, and I hope never to hear of another.

On the last of these occurrences, that of Mrs. Beebe, the Islander, a newspaper published here, made public our solemn protest as a people against being involved in any such acts. From that protest I make the following extracts:

"The marriage tie, spite of all men, is a tie for life, and more than for life. It is hardly possible that a man should treat his wife so ill that she will permanently leave him. Thousands run away, but all, all return. Whoever assists one against her husband, however deserving, however much an object of sympathy, is sure to meet with curses rather than thanks, even from her.

"We hope this will be the last transaction of this kind in this quarter. It is a matter of serious regret that any woman should be maltreated by her husband. But we wish to see no more runaway wives here. If this woman had brought thousands and bestowed it all on us, it would not compensate for the injury she has done us."—Northern Islander, Aug. 14, 1851.

I do not acknowledge the right of any man to drag my private affairs before the public, by saying that my "first wife resides in Wisconsin," and that I "have particular favor to two women here, by whom I have children." Yet I should not notice it but for the implication that my first wife is a "runaway wife," or a separated woman. I cultivate a farm of seven hundred and sixty acres in Walworth county, Wisconsin, where I spend about one-fourth of my time. It is convenient to have some person there who has more than a hireling's interest in the success of my business, and Mrs. Strang, or, if you please, my first wife, stays there most of the time to take charge, occasionally spending a winter with me at the Capitol, or on this Island.

I am nevertheless quite willing your readers should believe that I "have particular favor for two," four or ten women, whom I provide for, and who bear children to me, and whom I would marry if the law permitted me. If they imagine that in this I violate any law of this State, they are mistaken.

As to the question of morals I am prepared to justify it. And upon any question of morals, until the law interposes, I have a right to judge for myself. Though I acknowledge myself amenable to public opinion, I shall not answer at the bar of men who avail themselves of every opportunity to corrupt a neighbor's wife or prostitute his daughter. I never did such a deed, and never stepped my foot inside a house of ill fame. Doubtless there are men who think those venial offences, and mine mortal. On the other hand I think mine no offence at all, and theirs very abominable—destructive of peace and life. If I am in error, I err with Patriarchs, Prophets and Apostles.

I am not postmaster, and have never been, except about four years, at Ellington, N. Y.; nor have I been editor of a newspaper for several years, though I write regularly for several.

I was a lawyer in Chautauque county, N. Y., several years, but am not aware that in any sense I am a Philadelphia lawyer. If I have any reputation whatever as a lawyer in court, it is owing solely to the fact that newspapers have given me a world wide fame as a great criminal; and as the courts have uniformly acquitted me, people who knew nothing of the facts imagined I must be a very talented or very technical lawyer to so successfully slip through the meshes of the law. Their primary mistake is in imagining that I was ever in those meshes.

For my kingly state, if I am "monarch of all I survey," it is because people will have it so. I have not seized or sought power. Whatever I have of it, I hold it by the tenure of the hearts of the people.

It is true that I decide all controversies among men, all questions of right and obligation between them, throughout a territory sufficient for a respectable State; that no appeal has ever been taken from a determination of mine, and that my awards are performed without review, question or process. To any other man these results would be the proudest monument to his intelligence and virtue. To me I believe they are accounted the badges of crime. I shall content myself in appealing from the judgment of my fellows to that of posterity, and of God.

Of our Yankee population, the most litigious people in the world, out of five thousand, not one has ever been found to refuse to submit any question of his rights and liabilities to my judgment, nor to object to the justice of my awards.

Masters of vessels and insurance agents, having maritime controversies for fifty miles around, submit them to my judgment almost as uniformly as if I had, by the law of the State, an exclusive jurisdiction here.

And there is scarcely an Indian from Green Bay to the Grand Manitoulin, but if he suffers an injury at the hands of a white man, appeals to me for redress.

This is the very accusation of my enemies. It is thus, "I am monarch of all I survey." If this fealty is voluntary, who ever presented a higher evidence of justice? If it is involuntary, why does not the State vindicate its sovereignty by taking the teeth out of the mouth of this whelp, before it grows to a lion?

I may add that several of the new counties in this part of the State are without a judiciary, and others are provided only with courts held by Justices of the Peace. At each session of the Legislature, when I have been a member, I have labored most earnestly to remedy this defect in our laws; at the former session with but partial success, and at the latter with none at all. If it is a fault that I have acted as peace-maker and Judge throughout a large district of country, with a jurisdiction apparently more potent than any of the courts possess, it is not my fault that the necessity of some such voluntary jurisdiction exists. It is not improbable that the fear that a Mormon would be elected Judge of a judicial circuit, with a seat on the supreme bench, may have had something to do with the continuation of this state of things.

Your correspondent makes us thirty in number six years since, and now strong enough to banish all Gentiles and take the life of such as venture over the boundary, and to laugh at the authority of the State. If this is true, the State must wake up or perish.

I have no connection with the "hard shell democracy," and very little to do with political parties, and should have had nothing but that a political party in this State attempted not only to deny Mormons all share in the administration of government, but to ignore them as citizens.

When in 1850 a ticket was put in nomination for county and judicial officers, publicly pledged to exclude Mormons both from office and the jury box, and to deny them legal protection and process at law in all cases whatsoever, I cast my first vote since the election of Gen. Harrison to the Presidency. When I see an end of that crusade I shall have cast my last. And whatever party most secures the freedom of religion, with that shall I affiliate, while reluctantly forced into politics. Here I meet all men, and here I part with all.

It is proper for you to know that the accusation of your correspondent that "demagogues purchase our votes, agreeing not to molest us," and that Strang is inspector of elections and returning officer, and "just before election writes to the Cass fuglemen to know how many votes are necessary" to carry the election, and furnishes them, "even if the number amounts to more people than there are of all ages on the Island," is a two edged sword, and cuts both ways.

Kinsley S. Bingham, the present Republican Governor of Michigan, received 650 of the 695 votes cast at the last November election in the county of Emmet, (then including Manitowish.) I think you would not like to accuse him (and his worst enemies here do not) of obtaining those votes by "agreeing not to molest us, and to let us go on swimmingly."

Against Bingham, that old Democratic wheel horse, John S. Barry, was a candidate. It was known that the canvass would be a close one. Was the Democratic party bankrupt, that it could not bid for those votes, either money, immunity, patronage; that it could not promise, coax, cajole or threaten; or is there something lying deeper in the popular heart than demagoguism, which controls this vote? The Governor's case is not alone.

The vote at that election was a very large one; far the largest ever given here. It is therefore the proper test whether we have a practice of overvoting or making false returns.

I have already stated that in May the population was, by the official returns, 4,971. In November following, with the benefit of the summer emigration, the entire vote was but 695, or less than one in seven. In the entire State the vote was one in six of the population, or about 17 per cent. higher than in the Mormon settlements.

If our elections are fraudulent, why have they not been set aside? The opportunities have been abundant. Why have I been allowed to sit in the Michigan Legislature, both by a Democratic and a Republican House, against a most powerful effort to unseat me?

At the last election I was returned for the district consisting of the organized counties of Newaygo, Oceana, Grand Traverse, Emmet and Cheboygan, and several unorganized counties attached. A powerful demonstration was made to unseat me.— It was a triangular canvass. I held every vote in Emmet, and all but one in Cheboygan; Mr. Lay had all but six in Grand Traverse, and stood next to me in the canvass, and the allegation against me was that Emmet county had over voted more than my plurality. Newaygo and Oceana voted nearly unanimously for Mr. Brooks. The examination of documents on file in the Secretary of State's office, showed my vote 695 in a population of 4,971, or less than one in seven; and his 367 (and six against him,) in a population of 911, being more than one in three. So ends every such contest against me. After a great flourish of trumpets, this thing looked so bare faced, Mr. Lay shrank from the exhibition.

The fact that I received a unanimous vote save one, in the adjoining county of Cheboygan, containing but two Mormon families, is a singular comment on the assertion of "R. M. A.," that we are so hostile to the Gentiles as to banish and murder them.

If any of your readers will look into the "Catholic Almanac and Directory," under the head of "Diocese of Detroit," they will find recorded, right in the midst of us, four churches, La Croix, Middletown, Arbor Croche, and Beaver Island. I presume these churches are not kept up without some "Gentiles" to attend them. A few must have been more lucky than "R. M. A.'s" murdered fisherman.

We also have in our midst a Presbyterian church, the minister of which, the Rev. A. J. Porter, we recently elected to the respectable office of Judge of Probate. Much more hospitable than cutting his throat, and burying him beneath the rough sands.

I have been indicted several times, as your correspondent says; and he might have added that on several of these indictments I have been tried in the courts of my persecutors, being prejudged and foredoomed, and have, nevertheless, in every instance been honorably acquitted.

And more, I have been imprisoned on one charge and another, trumped up against me, but in fact for the witness of Jesus and the word of God, so many times, that by the utmost stretch of memory I cannot count them over; but I never failed of getting liberated, as soon as a respectable Judge could go through the legal forms.

I have sat sixteen days on trial for my life, listening to the false tale of each witness against me as one would listen in a theatre, without a play bill, have beheld the ponderous grates—have walked amidst clanking chains, or gazed between bars of iron for sun light, and beheld the ghastly gibbet, and I yet live beloved of many wise and good, ready to serve or be sacrificed for my fellow men.

It is news to me that a "revenue cutter" has accomplished my arrest. When so few honors are conferred I cannot afford to dispense with any that rightfully belong to me. I believe that I am the first "foreign potentate," upon whom the United States have conferred the distinguished honor of bringing him into the country in a national vessel. At a subsequent date Gov. Kossuth shared the honor. Previously Generals La Fayette and Santa Anna had only been sent home in men of warships. Twice the United States have made me their guest on board the war steamer Michigan, from my own Capitol to the Republican Court; and once in the same august style returned me to the bosom of my people. The revenue cutter Ingham, though provided with an extra armament, only acted a subordinate part in the squadron.

Truly it requires some power of face to avoid laughing at the relation of these occurrences.— But it is a little over four years since they were the issues of life, to a community of six hundred people.

Of wealth I have more than enough, and would gladly part with three-quarters of it, so I could be sure it would be used for the same philanthropic purposes to which I devote its incomes. From choice I dwell here in a small, plain log house, half filled with library and cabinet, which with its rural surroundings requires little labor in preserving, devoting the largest share of my time to the study of the natural sciences.

From duty, some portion of another week is devoted to the administration of public affairs. But nothing short of the necessity of providing for the safety from mobs and lawlessness, of those who have trusted all they have and all they hope for, on their faith in my divine mission, has ever called me for one moment from my favorite studies to politics. I envy not the man who considers me a proper object of assault.

Truly and sincerely,
JAMES J. STRANG.

NEW WHARF.

Mr. J. M. Wait has got his new wharf so far completed as to be in use. The steamer Michigan was lying to it a few evenings since receiving freight, being the first boat to try the work. The style of construction is new, but destined to serve well. This is the fourth wharf in the harbor, and as yet the business is not in the least diminished in value by the competition. So far the increase of facilities has increased the amount of business more than in proportion, and we presume two or three more first class wharves would find abundance of business at profitable prices. Too much credit cannot be awarded to Mr. Wait for his enterprise. Well does he deserve his success.

WHILE 'TIS DAYTIME LET US WORK.

Every mortal has his mission;
In this world of active strife,
Whether in a high position,
Or a lowly walk of life.
He it is, who now fulfilling
Every duty day by day,
Shows the mind and spirit willing
To perform its upward way.
Life's a bark upon the ocean,
Tossed and rocked by every gale;
Now scuds on with speedy motion,
Now with rent and tattered sail.
Life's a bright and sunny morning,
With some light refreshing showers,
Followed by dark cloudy warning
Of the storm that o'er us lowers.
Life's the chord of silver binding
Man in contact with his kind,
Death is but that bond unwinding,
Setting free the earth-bound mind.
Life's the pitcher of the fountain,
Whence immortal rills descend;
'Tis the fragile wheel surmounting
Cistern where pure waters blend.
Life's the day for deed and action,
Death's the rest, the time is night;
He who works with satisfaction,
Works while yet the hour is light.
Forward, then, the day is waning,
Westward sinks the setting sun;
Onward! on! without complaining,
Work, while yet it may be done.

HOW THE MASTERS LIVE.

But, let us now leave the rough usage of the field, where vulgar coarseness and brutal cruelty spread themselves and flourish, rank as weeds in the tropics; where a vile wretch, in the shape of a man, rides, walks or struts about, dealing blows, and leaving gashes on broken-spirited men and helpless women, for thirty dollars per month—a business so horrible, hardening and disgraceful, that, rather than engage in it, a decent man would blow out his own brains—and let the reader view with me the equally wicked, but less repulsive aspects of slave life; where pride and pomp roll luxuriously at ease; where the toil of a thousand men supports a single family in easy idleness and sin.

This is the great house; it is the home of the Lloyds. Some idea of its splendor has already been given—and it is here that we shall find that height of luxury which is the opposite of that depth of poverty and physical wretchedness that we have just now been contemplating. But, there is this difference in the two extremes, viz.: that in the case of the slave the miseries and hardships of his lot are imposed by others; in the master's case, they are his own.

The slave is a subject, subjected by others; the slaveholder is a subject, but he is the author of his own subjection. There is more truth in the saying that slavery is a greater evil to the master than to the slave than many, who utter it, suppose. The self-executing laws of eternal justice follow close on the heels of the evil doer here, as well as elsewhere.

The close-fisted stinginess that fed the poor slave on coarse corn meal and tainted meat; that clothed him in crasy tow linen, and hurried him on to toil through the field, in all weathers, with wind and rain beating through his tattered garments; that scarcely gave even the young slave-mother time to nurse her hungry infant in the fence corner; wholly vanishes on approaching the sacred precincts of the great house, the home of the Lloyds.

There the scriptural phrase finds an exact illustration: the highly favored inmates of this mansion are literally arrayed "in purple and fine linen," and fare sumptuously every day. The table groans under the heavy and blood-bought luxuries gathered with pains-taking care, at home and abroad. Fields, forests, rivers and seas, are made tributary here.

Immense wealth, and its lavish expenditure, fill the great house with all that can please the eye, or tempt the taste. Here appetite, not food, is the great desideratum. Fish, flesh and fowl are here in profusion. Chickens, of all breeds; ducks, of all kinds, wild and tame; the common and the huge Muscovite; Guinea fowls, turkeys, geese, and pea fowls, are in their several pens, fat and fattening for the destined vortex.

The graceful swan, the mongrels, the black-necked wild goose; partridges, quails, pheasants and pigeons; choice water fowl, with all their strange varieties, are caught in this huge family net.—Beef, veal, mutton and venison, of the most select kinds and quality, roll bounteously to this grand consumer.

The teeming riches of the Chesapeake Bay, its rock, perch, drums, crocus, trout, oysters, crabs and terrapin, are drawn hither to adorn the glittering table of the great house. The dairy, too, probably the finest on the eastern shore of Maryland—supplied by cattle of the best English stock, imported for the purpose, pours its rich donations of fragrant cheese, golden butter and delicious cream, to heighten the attraction of the gorgeous, unending round of feasting.

Nor are the fruits of the earth forgotten or neglected. The fertile garden, many acres in size, constituting a separate establishment, distinct from the common farm—with its scientific gardener, imported from Scotland, (a Mr. McDermott,) with four men under his direction, was not behind either in the abundance or in the delicacy of its contributions to the same full board. The tender asparagus, the succulent celery, and the delicate cauliflower; egg plants, beets, lettuce, parsnips, peas, and French beans, early and late; radishes, cantelopes, melons of all kinds; the fruits and flowers of all climes and of all descriptions, from the hardy apple of the north to the lemon and orange of the south, culminated at this point.—Baltimore gathered figs, raisins, almonds and juicy grapes from Spain. Wines and brandies from France; teas of various flavor, from China; and rich, aromatic coffee from Java, all conspired to swell the tide of high life, where pride and indolence rolled and lounged in magnificence and satiety.

Behind the tall-backed and elaborately wrought chairs stand the servants, men and maidens—fifteen in number—discriminately selected, not only with a view to their industry and faithfulness, but with special regard to their personal appearance, their graceful agility and captivating address.—Some of these are armed with fans, and are fanning, reviving breezes toward the overheated brows of the alabaster ladies; others watch with eager eye, and with fawn-like step anticipate and supply wants before they are sufficiently formed to be announced by word or sign.

These servants constituted a sort of black aristocracy on Col. Lloyd's plantation. They resembled the field hands in nothing, except in color, and in this they held the advantage of a velvet-like glossiness, rich and beautiful. The hair, too, showed the same advantage. The delicate colored maid rustled in the scarcely worn silk of her young mistress, while the servant men were equally well attired from the overflowing wardrobe of their young masters; so that, in dress, as well as in form and feature, in manner and speech, in tastes and habits, the distance between these favored few, and the sorrow and hunger-smitten multitudes of the quarter and the field, was immense; and this is seldom passed over.

Let us now glance at the stables and the carriage house, and we shall find the same evidences of pride and luxurious extravagance. Here are three splendid coaches, soft within and lions without.—Here, too, are gigs, phaetons, barouches, sulkeys and sleighs. Here are saddles and harnesses—beautifully wrought and silver mounted—kept with every care. In the stable you will find, kept only for pleasure, full thirty-five horses, of the most approved blood for speed and beauty.

There are two men here constantly employed in taking care of these horses. One of these men must be always in the stable, to answer every call from the great house. Over the way from the stable is a house built expressly for the hounds—a pack of twenty-five or thirty—whose fare would have made glad the hearts of a dozen slaves. Horses and hounds are not the only consumers of the slave's toil.

There was practiced, at the Lloyd's, a hospitality which would have astonished and charmed any health seeking northern divine or merchant, who might have chanced to share it. Viewed from his own table, and not from the field, the colonel was a model of generous hospitality. His house was, literally, a hotel, for weeks during the summer months. At these times, especially, the air was freighted with the rich fumes of baking, boiling, roasting and broiling.—The odors I shared with the winds; but the meats were under a more stringent monopoly—except that, occasionally, I got a cake from Mas' Daniel.

In Mas' Daniel I had a friend at court, from whom I learned many things which my eager curiosity was excited to know. I always knew when company was expected, and who they were, although I was an outsider, being the property, not of Col. Lloyd, but of a servant of the wealthy colonel.—On these occasions, all that pride, taste and money could do, to dazzle and charm, was done.

Who could say that the servants of Col. Lloyd were not well clad and cared for, after witnessing one of his magnificent entertainments? Who could say that they did not seem to glory in being the slaves of such a master? Who, but a fanatic, could get up any sympathy for persons whose every movement was agile, easy and graceful, and who evinced a consciousness of high superiority? And who would ever venture to suspect that Col. Lloyd was subject to the troubles of ordinary mortals?—Master and slave seem alike in their glory here. Can it all be seeming?

Alas! it may only be a sham at last. This immense wealth; this gilded splendor; this profusion of luxury; this exemption from toil; this life of ease; this sea of plenty; aye, what of it all? Are the pearly gates of happiness and sweet content flung open to such suitors? Far from it. The poor slave, on his hard, pine plank, but scantily covered with his thin blanket, sleeps more soundly than the feverish voluptuary who reclines upon his feather bed and downy pillow. Food, to the indolent lounge, is poison, not sustenance.

Lurking beneath all their dishes are invisible spirits of evil, ready to feed the self-deluded gourmandizers with aches, pains, fierce tempers, uncontrolled passions, dyspepsia, rheumatism, lumbago and gout; and of these the Lloyds got their full share. To the pampered slave of ease there is no rest in place. What is pleasant to-day, is repulsive to-morrow; what is soft now, is hard at another time; what is sweet in the morning, is bitter in the evening. Neither to the wicked, nor to the idler, is there any solid peace. "Troubled like the restless sea."

FRED. DOUGLASS.

WHAT WE DRINK.

Recent investigations by scientific men have developed an alarming condition of affairs with reference to our usual articles of diet. There is even death in our tea and coffee, and no such thing as pure green tea is to be met with. It is adulterated in China, and we have learned to adulterate it at home with all the cunning of the Asiatic. The beautiful blush bloom of the real green tea is exactly imitated by the Hong merchants, and black tea is openly colored in the neighborhood of Canton, in the most wholesale manner.

The materials used in coloring green tea are Prussian blue and gypsum. Mr. Robert Fortune, in his work, "The Tea Districts of China and India," ascertained precisely the quantity of Prussian blue and gypsum used in dying green teas. To 14 1/2 lbs. were applied 8 mace 2 1/2 candereens of this coloring matter, or rather more than an ounce. To every hundred pounds of colored green tea consumed in England and America, the consumer actually drinks more than half a pound of Prussian blue and gypsum. Of fifty samples of green tea analyzed by Dr. Hassall, all were adulterated.

The tea called Gunpowder—both black and green—is almost entirely a manufactured article—the former being called "scented caper." Both have a large admixture of what is termed "lye tea," or a compound of sand, dirt, tea-dust, and broken down portions of other leaves worked together with gum into small nodules. This compound contains forty-five per cent of earthy matter, and is manufactured both in England and China for the express purpose of adulterating tea.

When mixed with "scented caper," it is "faced" with black lead; when with gunpowder Prussian blue; turmeric and French chalk give it the required bloom. Illicit tea is also often mixed with a solution of gum, and a quantity of copperas.

Such being tea, we turn for consolation to coffee, but it is only avoiding Scylla to fall into Charybdis. Coffee is adulterated even more than tea. Chicory is one of the chief materials used for the adulteration. In twenty-eight samples tested, chicory constituted the main part of the so-called coffee. Red earth, roasted horse chestnuts, and black horses' and bullocks' livers are also used in the adulteration of coffee. These last are ground into a powder, and so mixed with chicory and other vegetable imitations of coffee.

As for milk, the pump contributes not the only adulteration.—Annatto, flour, starch and treacle are in the milk pan and the cream-jug. In brown sugar there are hundreds of what is called the sugar insect, and with white sugar there is mixed albumen of bullocks' blood. Pickles are made to look a bright green by means of verdigris, and cheap confectioners color their confections with arsenite of copper, chromate of lead, and other equally deadly poisons.

The adulterations of liquors are too numerous to give in detail. It will be enough to say that log-wood often enters largely into the composition of port wine, sulphate of zinc and white vitriol into that of London gin, and the nature of brandy is often extremely complicated in the ramification of its drugs. So much for the adulterations of food and drink.

SHE CHANGED HER MIND.

There are some persons who are never sick without thinking themselves very much worse off than they really are. Of this class was Mrs. Haskins, a young married lady, and the mother of two fine boys. On one occasion, being visited by a fever, the consequence of imprudent exposure, she gave herself up to the melancholy fancies which usually assailed her, and persuaded herself that she was going to die.

In consequence of this melancholy presentiment, she assumed so woe-begone an appearance that even her medical attendant was startled into believing that she was much worse than from her symptoms he had judged her to be.

Under these circumstances he advised her to make what earthly preparations she had yet to make, while she had yet time to do so.

Mrs. Haskins was an affectionate mother, and the thought of parting from the children to whom she was so warmly attached, at a time when, more than any other, they needed a mother's care, was peculiarly distressing.

"Their father will be kind to them, no doubt, and see that they are amply provided for, but nothing that he can do will supply to them the loss of a mother."

Gradually the idea of a step-mother suggested itself to the lady's imagination, and such was her care for the happiness of her children, that she became reconciled to an idea so repugnant to most wives, and actually began to consider who, among her acquaintances, was best fitted to become a second Mrs. Haskins.

At length her choice fell upon a Miss Parker, an intimate friend of her own. Feeling anxious to have this matter settled, she dispatched a messenger post haste for Miss Parker, who, after a brief interval, made her appearance at her friend's bedside.

"My dear friend," said Mrs. Haskins, in a feeble voice, "I have sent for you for what perhaps you will consider a singular reason.—But, believe me, it is a mother's anxiety that prompts me. I am very sick, and cannot live long.—So the doctor tells me, and my own feelings tell me that it must be so. The situation in which I shall leave my poor boys, who will thus be deprived of a mother's watchful care, distresses me beyond measure. There is only one way in which my anxiety can be relieved, and this it is which has prompted me to send for you. Promise me that when I am gone you will marry Mr. Haskins, and be to them a second mother. Do you refuse me? It is my last request."

Desirous of comforting her friend, Miss Parker assented to her request, adding:

"I will comply with your request, and more willingly, for I always liked Mr. Haskins."

"Always liked Mr. Haskins?" exclaimed his dying wife, raising herself on her elbow, her feeling of conjugal jealousy for a moment overpowering maternal affection, "you always liked my husband, did you? Then, I vow you shall never marry him, if I have to live to prevent it."

And Mrs. Haskins did live.—The revulsion of feeling resulting from Miss Parker's unexpected declaration accomplished in her case what the skill of physicians had been unable to effect.

There is an old saying, which, like most old sayings, has in it not a little truth, that when a woman wills, she will, depend on't, and when she won't, she won't, and there's an end on't. So it was in the case of Mrs. Haskins. She was determined that if Mr. Haskins ever does have a second wife, it shall not be Miss Parker.

MR. SNIPE'S LITANY.

From Nebraska bills, doctor's pills, western chills, and other ills—deliver us.

From want of gold, wives that scold, maidens old, and sharpers 'sold'—preserve us.

From Popish seers, mock auctioneers, Cossack spears, and woman's tears—deliver us.

From stinging flies, bakers' pies, and baby cries—deliver us.

From colic gripes, Paddies' pipes, and Mrs. Snipes—deliver us.

From modest girls, with waving curls, and teeth of pearls—never mind.

From evils, worse, sins that curse, and every dearth—deliver us.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 14.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, OCT. 18, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 81.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

at St. James, Beaver Island,

Lake Michigan, by

COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Saint James, August 10th '55.

DEAR BROTHER:—I resume the subject where I left off in my last communication. While pondering in my mind the scattered state of the saints, and hearing of no shepherd that I believed was authorized to lead the church, I was really in a state of gloom and despondency.

One afternoon, after the toil of a warm day, I came to my house to rest, and found some papers setting forth the appointment of J. J. Strang to the prophetic office, instead of Joseph Smith, deceased. It is true that I had heard his name spoken of as a leader and prophet; but in my mind numbered him with other pretenders, as I had not wholly abandoned the belief that Joseph Smith had appointed his successor in one of his own posterity.

I therefore wrote brother Strang a letter, questioning his assumption of authority, and requesting him to publish my letter; but the next day after mailing my letter I received another package from brother Strang, containing the Diamond, a small tract, setting forth brother Strang's appointment and calling to the prophetic office.

On a close and critical reading and investigation of the tract I changed my opinion, and wrote to brother Strang countermanding the publication of my former letter. From this time I had frequent manifestations of brother Strang's being called of God to lead his people, even as Moses to lead the Israelites out of Egyptian bondage, and I began to set myself earnestly to make preparations to gather with the saints. I was prospered in all my undertakings, and managed so as to be well provided with teams and four or five hundred dollars to bear my expenses to Beaver Island.

Jarvis G. Miner, who had been with Lyman Wight, having had a difficulty with him, left his organization; and Miner solicited me to intercede with Wight to get a wagon and team for him, and he would go with me, as he was convinced that brother Strang was the true successor of Joseph Smith.

I spoke to Wight in his behalf. He said Miner had a large family of children, and all the labor they had done since members of his association had not half fed them; and they had been a great bill of expense to the company; and that he had brought nothing into the company, and if a just account had been kept, that Miner would be many hundred dollars in his debt, (or rather the company's), and he could not, consistent with the rights of the company, give him anything; and that he was an unprincipled knave; but if I would haul him away, that he would add a yoke or two of oxen to my outfit.

I concluded to take him part or all the way, as he manifested a great anxiety to go, and furnished him an old wagon and two yoke of oxen to haul his family. I also gave him money according to the number of his family to bear their expenses, as a matter of liberality, on account of his penniless condition. I had all preparation made to start on the 12th of October, 1849, but my horses strayed off that we did not find them until after noon on the 13th, at which time we yoked up our oxen and started.

If it had not been for the circumstance of my horses straying I should have started the afternoon of the 12th; and as every thing that transpired from the day I made up my mind to move to the Beaver Islands, seemed to be directed for my good, so also on this occasion. I received a letter from brother Strang (that gave me much comfort) which I should not have received if my horses had not strayed, as it came to hand the evening that I had set apart for starting my journey.

We had a great deal of rain for the first ten days of our journey, a circumstance unusual at this season of the year in Texas, the waters mostly high and difficult crossing them. We however had no evil befall us until we crossed the Brasos River. We crossed at the falls. There was a crowd of emigrants crossing at the time of our reaching this place, which set us back in crossing with our wagons, (four in number.) We swam our oxen and horses, and took our wagons apart and ferried them over in canoes, together with our baggage.

While this toilsome labor was going on, we put Miner in charge of the camp and cattle. When all was ferried over we began to prepare for a start, but through the negligence of Miner and the little boys left to assist him, they so managed as to let all our oxen stray off, but one yoke. My son Joshua, nephew and myself got upon horses, put the remaining yoke of oxen in charge of Miner, and went in pursuit of the lost cattle. After much diligent search we found them about five miles off in the Brasos bottom, however not until the second day.

When we got into camp we found that Miner had let the yoke of oxen we left in his charge escape, and after a day or two search for them, without hearing any tidings of them, we abandoned them, and proceeded on our journey, lest we should lose more of our oxen, as the bottom was so thickly set with vines, brush and high weeds that it was only with the utmost care that we could keep them together by constant herding.

I found in Miner and his careless, wasteful family a cumbersome load to drag along. But on account of his professed faith and his apparent desire to get to the church, I would not abandon him. I had given him two yoke of oxen and a wagon, and also money to defray his expenses, but he did not seem to realize my liberality, and used very little economy in the expenditure of the money I had given him. And I apprehended he would soon be out of money, and that if he got through to the church he would have to be assisted. I therefore made no other calculation than to help him through to the church, if he would try in a small degree to help himself.

We had a very rainy fall, and much high water, which made our progress very slow. We however kept moving, and every night got nearer our place of destination. The day after we crossed the Trinity River, I heard that Clark Lyman Whitney, who had come from Council Bluffs, to build a mill for a Mr. Overton, an old Missourian, was then only two days in advance of me, on his return to Council Bluffs, and from thence to Salt Lake. I started on horseback, the same night that I received the intelligence, to overtake him, and on the third day in the forenoon I overtook him at Preston, on Red River. As we had been a long time acquainted, we had a joyous meeting.

I, without ceremony, told him where I was going, and my reasons for so doing; and in a concise manner laid before him brother Strang's appointment to the prophetic office and calling, according to the revelations relative thereto in the Covenants and Commandments given to the church through Joseph Smith. After a short conversation with him on the subject, he acquiesced with me in opinion, and, without hesitancy, said he would go with me if he had but means to travel on.

I told him I had money, and would divide with him, and when we run out of funds we would stop and work for more. (Whitney's family are now on the Island,) and thus keep moving until we got to our place of destination. I returned and met my family, and brother Whitney remained at Preston (the place I overtook him) until I arrived there with my family and effects. And on my arrival at Preston we ferried Red River, entered the Choctaw Nation, and prosecuted our journey north. The rain was almost an every day (and night also) occurrence, consequently we got along very slowly, and uncomfortably for the women and children. We had to lay by many days on account of high water, and after taking the advanced season of the year, the cold and wet weather, together with the delicate situation of some of the females, we came to the conclusion to stop at the first good place to obtain profitable employment, and make our winter quarters.

We had difficulty that we did not anticipate, on account of our Texas oxen having been raised altogether on grass, there was some of them that could not be learned to eat corn and hay, (when we were even able to procure it, as the article was scarce, and the price very high,) and three of our oxen died of fatigue and hunger, before they would eat corn, (one ox that I had let Miner have, and two of mine.)

On the 12th day of December, 1849, we arrived at the North Canadian River, (a tributary of Arkansas,) one of the principal trading posts in the creek and Seminole Indian territory, where we stopped for the winter. We obtained an abundance of labor, by which we procured a full supply of every thing necessary to make ourselves comfortable, and feed our teams. It was not long until it was known who we were, and I was solicited by some of the missionaries to preach, to which I assented. We had a full attendance of missionary priests, traders, and some few Indians and half breeds that could speak English.

After I was done sermonizing, the missionaries held a council, (as I was afterwards informed,) in which it was agreed that it would be an injury to their cause to enter into a controversy with any of the Mormons, as they had no one among them able to meet us in a religious controversy, and their better policy would be to treat us respectfully and courteously, as we were esteemed industrious and intelligent men; that their true policy would be to chime in with the public opinion, and avoid, if possible, the injury of their cause by indecent controversy with us on doctrinal tenets.

During our stay in this country, we made numerous friends among the Indians, and some of the half-breeds. I preached frequently to the Indians through an interpreter, and many were believing, and I would have baptized many, but I did not know what to instruct them, and I had doubts also that my authority would be irregular, as I had not been authorized and sent to preach the gospel by the legitimate head of the church. I preached many sermons, at the request of the traders, and became quite popular among them.

They patronized us and paid us liberally for our labor, and after we had raised a sufficiency of money (as we supposed) to take us to the church, we could scarcely get away from them, as the traders and Indians, without exception, wished to retain us among them. We got all our engagements fulfilled, and ready to leave the country. Miner concluded to stay, as he had not made enough money to bear his expenses to the church. We proposed helping him, if he would go; but he declined going with us, having several jobs of work on hand unfinished, and could not get the pay for it until completed.

On the fourth day of July, 1850, we started for Beaver Island. The little company, consisting of twenty-three persons in number, viz: brother Whitney and family, my son, Joshua L. Miller, wife and children, and my own family. The weather was excessively warm and rainy, and we made slow progress in getting along; and after getting along to the west side of the State of Arkansas, the murrain broke out in our cattle. We had three oxen that died of the disease, and upon consultation we concluded to stop and exchange our oxen for horses, and our ox wagons for horse wagons, although we were fully aware that we would have to do it at a great sacrifice.

In making the exchange of our oxen and wagons necessarily took some time. We had wagons to fit up and repair, and harness to buy, and it was not until about two weeks after our stop that we were again ready for an onward move. We however got all our preparations made, and on the afternoon of the 22d of July we again resumed our journey. Having all horse teams we progressed finely and comfortably, taking into account the great amount of rain that occasionally fell while on our journey.

We passed through the State of Missouri diagonally, crossed the Missouri River at Jefferson city, (the capital of the State,) and the Mississippi River at Hannibal. At this place we had twelve miles ferrying, and for the privilege paid a round sum. I do not now remember the precise amount. Nothing of particular interest occurred on our journey through the State of Illinois, except the hindrance of our progress, caused by the high waters. And on the fourth day of September, 1850, we arrived at Voree, where we were kindly received by the saints there, and greatly comforted and refreshed by the manifest kindness extended towards us by all the brethren, which was indeed consoling to us, after the exposure, toil and trouble incident to our journeyings, and attendant perplexity of being without a shepherd.

The sensations roused up in our bosoms, by the manifest brotherly kindness of all the saints, has left a remembrance of gratitude on my mind that time never can efface. We found the brethren closely engaged in hauling their grain crops. We laid hold with our teams to assist them. I made known to brother Benjamin G. Wright (who was in charge of affairs at Voree,) my intention of going to Beaver Island, the seat of the First Presidency, and we took under advisement how to dispose of my wagons and horses and procure the necessary outfit, whereupon we came to the conclusion that I would turn all I had over to brother Wright, (or rather the association,) and for him to provide me with such an outfit for the Island as their circumstances would justify. Brother Whitney concluded to remain at Voree, (where he died the succeeding spring.) On my part I worked with my might in assisting the brethren in their ordinary labors, until such time as might be convenient to get my outfit for the place; my desires inspired me to go, and I did

No one can possibly realize my gratitude, praise and thanksgiving to the God of heaven for my safe deliverance from that perplexity of mind and burning anxiety for a respite from the misrule of the haughty and arrogant usurpers of authority in the church and kingdom of God; and my then expectations of being in a week or two placed again under the guidance of the true shepherd of the flock of God's people on earth, but those alone who have passed through the like ordeal that I have in the last six years, subsequent to the death of Joseph Smith, and up to the time of my arrival at Voree.

The remembrance of my feelings on the occasion herein alluded to, awakens anew in my bosom the liveliest sensations of gratitude for the past, and also praise and thanksgiving for the glorious prospects of the present and future blessings, that the God of heaven is so graciously bestowing on the little flock. And were the saints under surrounding circumstances to withhold their gratitude and praise, it does really seem to me that the very stones, seas, mountains, brooks, rills and forest trees would cry aloud in praise to the God of our fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for his matchless blessings in his deliverance from Gentile oppression, and the sustaining us in the dominion and inheritance he has given us, as also the blessings and bounteous yield of our crops and present prosperity.

Although at the present time I am heavily borne down with disease and bodily infirmity of long standing, nevertheless in my heart I feel to magnify and praise the God of heaven for the blessings I have received at his bounteous hand, as also for the blessings and good things he is daily bestowing on his people who have congregated on the God-given possession, that they may keep his law.

After a necessary time had elapsed to procure an outfit to go to Beaver Island, near the last days of September, by the assistance of brother Wright and the brethren at Voree, we set out for the seat of the First Presidency with light hearts and buoyant spirits, of so soon realizing our expectations in seeing a prophet called of God and ordained by angels to lead the church of Christ.

We lay waiting at Racine for a boat to convey us to the Island a day or two, but none calling as we expected we engaged a passage on the brig Boston, and went aboard. She was bound for Grand Traverse Bay, and not having a full freight, the master agreed to take us at about propeller rates. There were other brethren aboard beside my family, which made it rather an object to take us to Beaver. There was nothing of an extraordinary nature occurred on our voyage. It was rather of a pleasant kind to me, but those of my family who had never been on large waters or a sail vessel, had a good deal of sea sickness.

On our arrival at Beaver Harbor, our vessel came to anchor, and in a short time brother Strang came on board, giving us a hearty welcome. I knew him from description or otherwise, before he got on board. He and brother Phineas Wright rendered us all the assistance in their power in getting us and our effects landed, and getting a cabin to shelter us from the weather, which was somewhat boisterous at this time.

I did not, it is true, act as the pilgrim fathers that landed some centuries ago at Plymouth Rock, but I have no doubt in my mind that I felt quite as much or more gratitude and heartfelt joy for my safe arrival and landing at this place, as they possibly could have felt on that memorable occasion.

I may at some future time resume my narrative, as subsequent events are fraught with some of the most thrilling incidents of my life.

Most truly and sincerely,
GEORGE MILLER.

SYMPATHY.

How much better this beautiful world we live in would get along, or rather we should say, we its denizens, if there was only a little more brotherly love and neighborly feeling manifested by us for one another. If, instead of being forever on the alert to watch for and point out the foibles and failings of our friends, we bestow an equal amount of care upon the suppression of our own errors, the regulating of our own lives.

It is customary to say that human nature is pre-eminently prone to decay virtues and magnify sins, but this is only a soph-ism by means of which we shift a burden we have no desire should fall to the ground, upon other shoulders, and go on our way rejoicing that we are not accountable for what is innate in our very souls. When a man has his way in life to carve out, it must be accomplished, if accomplished at all, in the midst of persecution, envy, selfish rivalry, and an earnest endeavor on the part of all who have reached the top of the ladder to prevent his attaining an equal height; but let him once get there, let him once touch the spot he has toiled for, and then lay himself open in any particular to the censures of the carping world, and he will be at once hurled from the dizzy height without one act of sympathy; one word of pity to soften his downfall.

NORTHERN ISLANDER

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, OCT. 18, 1855.

The following article is from the Grand River Times, published at Grand Haven, Mich., of September 26th:

Land and Water Pirates.

Reports have been frequent for several days past of robberies and other outrages being committed by men in boats, supposed to be Mormons, upon the inhabitants and their property along this coast of Lake Michigan. The first we heard of these piratical crews was from those who accompanied Judge Martin, in holding Circuit Court at Grand Traverse. The story was that twenty-one men were seen in three boats, hovering along the coast, near Grand Traverse, and that about that time an attempt was made to carry off a woman with her child, from Grand Traverse. About the same time they made an attempt to rob a house, and were fired upon.

We next hear by the mail carrier, on the route from Grand Haven to Manistee, that Freeman's mill, at Free Soil, was burned down two weeks ago last Friday night, and that on the same night the store at Freeman's mill was broken open and barrels of sugar, and various other things of considerable value, were taken out and carried off.

At the same time five men, with a new boat, nicely painted, and built for speed, were known to be in that vicinity. Another report is, that the store at Stony Creek, belonging to Mr. Campbell, of that place, was robbed. Last Wednesday night these five men, with the new boat, were in this port, and were probably frightened away by an old acquaintance of theirs, who had been driven from Beaver Island. This acquaintance knows the men and their names, or a part of them.

They left here on Thursday morning, and on Saturday morning last made a descent upon the store of Robinson & Plummer, and the tannery of Calvin Cox, of the town of Ganges, in Allegan county, robbing the store of goods to the value of sixteen hundred dollars, and the tannery of five hundred dollars worth of leather and hides, in an unfinished state; they were tracked from the store and tannery to the wharf, where this new boat was known to have been lying on Saturday night.

A warrant has been issued in Allegan county for their arrest. The men who have thus been robbed, at Ganges, came here on Sunday night, and here learned from Mr. D. Moon, and others, that the same boat was seen to pass here between eight and nine o'clock on Sunday morning, bound north, under full sail, with their boat heavily laden.

There is no longer any doubt of there being a gang of desperadoes along this coast, well armed, taking various kinds of goods, preparing a good winter's store of goods, to be sold somewhere at the north this winter. We advise the inhabitants, the whole length of this coast, to be on their guard when any small boats visit them.

This story is well told. Keep it going. Possibly somebody will believe it. Of all the credulous people in the world, the most credulous are those who think it the height of credulity to believe anything good of the Mormons.

Here is strung together seven crimes, including burglary, arson and an attempt to kidnap, having no similarity of character, no unity of purpose, and no apparent connection whatever, occurring in four different counties, along three hundred miles of Lake coast, and no evidence whatever as to who are the guilty parties; and to the Mormons the Mormons are upon thee, Sampson.

And who are the Mormons?

A little community of people, of a peculiar religion, located eighty miles from where any of these crimes were committed, and three hundred from some of them, forcing the means of subsistence out of rigid nature in the frozen north, where industry and economy are necessary to sustain life; acknowledged by their bitterest enemies to present an example of honesty and good order among themselves without a parallel in all the State; enforcing unpopular laws, like the liquor law, and the laws against gambling, &c., as they are no where else enforced among an Anglo-Saxon people; so exemplary in their every day life that in two counties there is not a prisoner, a pauper, a drunkard, and scarcely a Sabbath breaker.

And crime is so uncommon in a border country, just upon the verge of civilization, like the settlements along the east shore of Lake Michigan, it is not to be believed that any along there could do any of these things. No; the Mormons must have done it. These Mormons have been steadily accused of all the crimes committed, and half the State watching for six years past, and never detected them in doing anything; therefore they must have done it.

A few years since somebody stole a lantern, worth a dollar, and a piece of old iron, worth three shillings, from the wharf at Presque Isle, one hundred and twenty-five miles east of here; and lo! it must be a gang of Beaver Island pirates. What a convenience it is for the thieves in Ottawa and Allegan that only three hundred miles away there are Mormons to serve as scapegoats for the petty thefts they commit on their next door neighbors.

We congratulate the Grand River Times that he has something besides conjecture to found his opinion on. He has information from "Mr. D. Moon." Pray, is this "Mr. D. Moon" the "old acquaintance who was driven away from Beaver Island?"

We presume he is. We recollect of a person of that name being driven away. There are several other fugitives from justice, scattered about, who have a similar claim for the sympathy and confidence of the public. The Mormons have driven them away. Hence the order that prevails here.

And "Mr. D. Moon," who is he? O, he is a common sample of the accusers of our brethren. We did not know before that the editor of the Times kept such company. How odd it must sound to the Times' conferees to be Mr. D. It had been supposed that except for an occasional legal proceeding he would have forgotten that he had any other name than Dave.

In 1843, late in the fall Dave landed at the Indian village on Beaver Island and cast away, and a renegade from his father's house, debilitated with licentiousness, and the diseases incident to keeping the company of strange women.

Infirm, destitute and unable to get away, the Indians, with characteristic hospitality, sustained him through the winter. Change of modes of life, constrained morality, and, more than all, the want of whiskey, improved him so much, that in the spring he succeeded in inducing a low, ignorant Indian woman to marry him.

This woman he murdered. We don't know as a case of murder could really be made out at law. Some of his set in this region regarded it a case of justifiable homicide. At least she disobeyed him, and he whipped her with an axe, sometimes striking with the butt of the helve, sometimes with the head of the axe, and two blows with the edge. But as he was drunk and she sober, the blows only took partial effect. She did not die under his hands. She survived three or four days; and the only question was whether she died of the wounds, or of getting flyblown and maggoty, for want of care.

No man gets so low but some woman will trust herself in his keeping. He got another Indian wife, with whom he lived two or three years. She finally left him and married an Indian, and is yet living in this neighborhood. Until 1848 his life exhibited the usual round of dissipation and violence, with all the outlaws and robbers, who infested this border country in such numbers as to make a distinct feature in society.

In 1848 he was living with Joseph P. and Anson Young, men of a similar class, though not as low as himself. With them he had a quarrel, real or pretended, and left them, threatening vengeance, and the third night after, at midnight, their establishment burnt. The buildings, being of cedar poles, were of little value, but several hundred dollars worth of staves, barrels, clothing, and a boat load of traders' goods, belonging to other persons, were in the buildings, and were a total loss.

Whether this was really an act of revenge on the part of Dave, or the quarrel, burning and all were a joint enterprise of the set, was never satisfactorily ascertained.

Certain it is that the Youngs prosecuted Moon, and on the examination before Justice Bowers proved that his boat left their place about the same moment the fire sprung up, and went with the utmost speed to the Indian village, six miles off, where he landed from it and made haste to bed, where in a very few minutes the pursuing messenger found him, and as he called to him, Moon made a hurried answer, "what is the matter Jo? are you burnt out? There, now, that will be laid to me, but I haven't been there." When "Jo" asked, "what did you know about the burning, if you have not been there?" Dave replied, "O, I dreamed it, but they will all say I did it."

Why such a prosecution was got up and abandoned as it was with such evidence, those can tell who were in the secret. The Youngs lost nothing, but some trifling cabins of cedar poles. But nobody in this country ever believed that the goods burned with the buildings. Not only all the parties to the proceedings, but the Justice before whom the examination occurred, were suspected of being richer in consequence. If any one wishes to know more, he must ask them. Doubtless they can answer, "who killed Billy Patterson?"

Once well out of this scrape, Moon contrived to get into another, by joining with Bunker and Pond, from Schoharie Co., New York, and three others in committing a succession of rapes on a squaw, each serving himself in turn as the others held the victim. This partly broke up the nest, but as the Indians were quieted by presents, Moon gradually returned to his old haunts and habits.

But the reader asks, what has this to do with the Mormons driving Moon off from Beaver Island? Nothing. There was no law here then. We were attached to Mackinac Co., and Mormons had not the control as they have now.

As soon as they got control, Moon was driven out. Would you like to know how that was done? Moon got a quantity of stove bolts off from Uncle Sam's land down on the beach, and offered them for sale. Mr. Ray Peckham, from Racine, an itinerant merchant and fish trader, purchased them, paying in provisions and shelf goods. Then Moon (the bolts not having been moved) got the Capt. of a Mackinac vessel to examine them, and going with him to Mackinac, he there sold the same bolts to Michael Dousman for a new boat, a quantity of gilling twine, and two barrels of whiskey.

Returning from Mackinac he commenced dealing out his whiskey to the Indians, on which the distinguished brave, Wata-ne-sa, made complaint against him before a Justice of the Peace, for a violation of Sec. 15, of the act of 1851, to amend the revised statutes concerning "tavern keepers and retailers of spirituous liquors," and recovered a penalty of $20.00 and the costs. Threatening to take vengeance on the Indian for complaining of him, the Justice very quietly committed him to custody until he should give security to keep the peace.

He got off with difficulty, and immediately Michael Dousman, the old patriarch of Mackinac, for a half century the wealthiest man in Michigan, commenced proceedings against him for obtaining goods of him by false pretences. Dousman had taken away a small portion of the bolts, and Peckham had got a writ of replevin for them.

Peckham, finding himself at law with Dousman about the title to property for which he had paid Moon, and uncertain what the result would be, commenced his suit against Moon for again selling the bolts after selling them to him.

Moon found himself in a land of law. The place was too hot for him, and so he stepped out. It was the Mormons that drove him from Beaver Island. True, the prosecutors in none of these cases were Mormons. But the Justices and Constables, all the officers who had any thing to do with them were. He is not that the unfortunate victims should suspect only the Mormons, a few hundred miles away, instead of looking after them.

NEW MILL.

The saw mill recently built by John Henderson, on "Big River."

St. James, Mich. Oct. 1st. '55.
MY DEAR BROTHER:—I was much gratified on the receipt of your kind letter to hear once more from my dear relatives, but I think you forgot to mention anything about the welfare of JAMES and My beloved brother, the Bible teaches us; no such doctrine as declared in your confession of faith. When Jesus Christ committed a gospel dispensation to the Apostles he promised that the signs should follow the believer. In his name they should cast out devils; they should lay hands on the sick; and they should recover; and if they took up serpents, or drank any deadly poison, it should not hurt them. The church was left organized with Apostles, Prophets, Pastors and Teachers, tongues and interpretation of tongues, &c. &c.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES.

J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tinware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Nails, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Hats and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, he trusts to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not required.

He has also on hand a small assortment of Clocks, Watches, Jewelry, &c. : 211-7491
Saint James, June 19th, 1855. 70a90

The Pocket "Maid of the Mist" will make weekly trips from Saint James to Chaska, Atmos, Charlevoix and Auburn, Crookston, leaving the mail. She has excellent accommodations.

THE SECOND WIFE.

They told me he had won before Another's heart than mine,
And laid his first and deepest love
Upon an earlier shrine.
They said my spirit oft must grieve,
If I my lot must cast
With one who held so sacred still Remembrance of the past.
I heeded not; my bark was launched
With his on life's swift tide,
And earth holds not a happier heart
Than mine, a second bride.
I know that he had loved and lost
What life may ne'er give back,
The flowers that bloomed in freshness once
Have withered in his track.
I know that she—the angel called—Looked out from yon blue heaven,
A watcher o'er the earth bound soil
From which her own was riven.
Together do we oft recall
This dream of other years;
Nor do I love him less to know,
He once had cause for tears.
More blest am I that he hath been My love's appointed task,
To wake anew the "lights of home,"
In which his soul may bask.

GATHERING OF ISRAEL.

The gathering of Israel is a subject that has been a matter of study among many of the learned divines (so called) of the present age. In treating of this subject I shall necessarily be brief, but endeavor to give some of the outlines, and show that whenever God has had a people, owned and acknowledged of him, they have been gathered, to a greater or less extent.

In commencing upon this subject, let us go back to the days of Enoch. He was a righteous man before God, and the son of Seth, the seventh from Adam. It appears that he had an understanding of right and righteousness, and he plead with the people to do the will of the Father, and observe his laws and statutes. A few of the people took his counsel, and gathered together and built a city. Enoch kept the law of God perfectly, and walked with him, and taught the people from time to time in the ways of holiness. As I have to be brief, I refer the reader to the Book of Jasher, and also to the Book of Commandments, published at Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, for a minute history.

The history as given in the Book of Commandments is spoken of in the Book of Mormon, 211th page, Nauvoo edition. The people in those days became hardened in their hearts, and walked in their iniquitous ways to that degree that God repented that he had made man, and he called Noah and commissioned him to go and warn the people of his wrath, and tell them to repent and do the will of the Father, or he would destroy them off the face of the earth. Noah accordingly went forth proclaiming the word of the Lord for the space of one hundred and twenty years, preaching unto them that the earth would be deluged, and calling on them to gather up and prepare an ark, that they might escape the calamity that awaited the stiff-necked and rebellious.

Many believed on the words of Noah, and gathered up and prepared the ark; and because the floods did not appear when they got ready became discouraged, and began to say in their hearts, the Lord delays his coming, and turned away, inasmuch that when the floods did begin to descend, that there was no one to take possession of the ark but Noah and his family. After the flood, when the people had multiplied upon the earth, they again began to walk in their own ways, and contrive plans how they might outwit the Almighty, so that he could not drown them.

Therefore they commenced a tower that was to reach to the heavens; and God, ascertaining their plans, says, "Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech."—The question arises, who was God talking to? He banished all human beings from his presence at the time he turned Adam and Eve out of the garden, so that he had no familiar friend to walk and talk with as before. But since that time Enoch had been faithful to him in the midst of a corrupt race, and God had taken him. So he could say let us go down and confound their language, &c.—With these brief sketches of Enoch and Noah I pass to Abraham.

It is abundantly evident that Abraham had the gospel preached to him. Abraham, as well as the rest of the patriarchs cotemporary with him, were saved by obedience to some law, not the law of Moses, for it was not then given; therefore it must have been the gospel, as I shall probably show. It appears that Abraham and those immediately connected with him were not all the righteous men that there were upon the earth at that time, for there was Abimelech, and the Gerarites. Melchisedec also was cotemporary with Abraham, and was a priest of the most high God.

Melchisedec had the same priesthood that Christ and the Apostles held, and therefore authorized to administer in the same ordinances, and build up churches upon the same principles. And it appears that he did officiate in the same ordinances, in that he administered bread and wine to Abraham, which is one of the institutions of the kingdom of Christ. It appears from the history of that age that Melchisedec and others preached the gospel with the same authority that Christ and the Apostles had, organizing churches and branches, over one of which Melchisedec presided at Salem; a branch also at Gerar, and in all probability one in Egypt.

Those shepherd kings spoken of in the land of Canaan were in all probability branches of the church. But as they did not gather up to the fold, where they could receive instruction, became indifferent and gave themselves over to idolatry, apostatized, and their priests became temporal monarchs.

In the days of Joshua there seems to have been but a vestige as it were of the pure principles of the gospel left among them.—The sayings or expressions which we hear from them, such as "Noah was a preacher of righteousness," "Melchisedec blessed Abraham, and gave him bread and wine," "that the gospel was preached to Abraham," "that the law of Moses was added (of course to the gospel) for transgression," and other like expressions, is sufficient to prove that the patriarchs not only understood the gospel, but obeyed it.

It appears that in the days of Abraham the people gathered together and were established with princes and patriarchs, and among them was Abraham, a mighty prince, having immense herds of cattle, sheep and asses, and a very great household. Upon a certain occasion he mustered three hundred and eighteen trained men to pursue the enemy, and rescue Lot, his brother's son, all of them servants born in his own house.—With these brief outlines of testimony in three cases in the early ages, we pass down to the dispensation of which Christ stood at the head.

Jesus Christ taught the pure principles of the gospel, and called on men to obey, that everlasting righteousness and the rest of God might be brought in. It seems that many received the word, and followed as he directed; others disregarding his precepts altogether, and opposing with all the sagacity that devils could invent. While gathered at Capernaum Jesus was teaching them in the ways of salvation, when they say among themselves, "These are hard sayings, who can bear them?"

These men, following in the same wake as those in the preceding ages, turned back and walked no more with him at all. Jesus Christ worked a faithful ministry, and in endeavoring to establish everlasting righteousness his life was sought for and taken by those who had strong delusion, that they might believe a lie, because they received not the truth, and took pleasure in unrighteousness.

After the resurrection and ascension of the Savior, the Apostles preached the gathering of the saints. Paul, upon a certain occasion, in instructing the brethren that were at Corinth, says: "Wherefore come out from them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." In another place we find him exhorting the brethren, as they had been gathered together, not to be easily shaken in faith; that satan, with all manner of signs and lying wonders, would endeavor to lead them from the fold of God, but for them to be firm, always abounding in good works. And again, Rev. xviii. 4, "And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and receive not of her plagues."

It appears that the old prophets had an eye to the gathering of Israel in the last days, or in the dispensation of the fullness of times. We discover by Isaiah v. 26 that the work was to commence by his hissing to the nations, and then setting up an ensign for the people to gather to. And in another place we find that Ephraim is to push the people to (at) the ends of the earth. Hissing to the nations, an ensign for the people to gather to, Ephraim to push them together from the ends of the earth; what for? Christ said that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he would gather together all things, both in heaven and on earth.

Christ likens the gathering to a net that is cast into the sea and gathers of all sorts of fish. Zechariah, in speaking of the subject, says: "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, in those days it shall come to pass that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirts of him that is a Jew, saying, we will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you."

But, says one, all this does not prove the necessity of gathering together in this age. To such a one we are led to almost exclaim as Christ did, "ye fools, ye discern the face of the sky, but cannot discern the signs of the times."—Paul says that in the last days perilous times shall come. Turn to the 3d chapter of 2d Timothy, and read for yourselves. Where is the man that would wish to live in the midst of such an ungodly people as Paul describes there? Take Christ's own words concerning the last days, and see if they do not prove the necessity of gathering together to escape the calamities that await the ungodly. Upon a certain occasion his disciples asked him of the signs of his coming, and of the end of the world. He says: "Take heed that no man deceive you; for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many."

Look about for a moment, and see the numerous claimants to something of divine origin, and among them we find mesmerizers, with their clairvoyants, to tell of things that are estimated that nothing but a supernatural influence can reveal. The rapping spirits, with their mediums, acting in their capacity, deceiving many. All the followers of these strange fictions, too numerous to mention, do not take the admonition of Christ,

"take heed that no man deceive you," but press forward with all the energy they are possessed of, and fulfill his predictions.

And again, "Ye shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars; nation rising up against nation; kingdom against kingdom; famines, pestilences, earthquakes in divers places." Who are so blind they cannot see all these things taking place? Look at the commotion of the nations of the earth, and of kingdoms; the numerous human beings that are perishing for want of the necessities of life, from time to time; the different diseases among mankind, that set at defiance all the acquired skill of physicians; and earthquakes, read the accounts of some half dozen the present year.

And again we read in Luke, commencing at the 25th verse of the 21st chapter, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring," &c. For a moment consider the damage of the marine interests upon the Lakes the present season, greater than was ever known before. All these are but the beginning of sorrows.

In a revelation printed in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, Joseph Smith has told the people of this generation that the waters were cursed. But still they say it is just as it always has been.—As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the son of man, eating, drinking, marrying, giving in marriage, discerning the face of the sky, but not the signs of the times, until the judgments of God creep over them step by step, and until they are overwhelmed. Take not only our advice, but the advice of Christ, and take heed that your hearts be not overcharged with the cares of this life, so that you be utterly blinded to these things, and that day come upon you unawares; but gather up to the places that God has appointed, and learn righteousness by the living word, and be prepared to enter into the rest that remains for the faithful. P.

ANTIQUITIES OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

In excavating near the mouth of Carp River, Marquette county, in what appeared to be the ancient bed of the river, (situated about ten feet above the present bed,) various implements and tools of copper have been found, such as knives, chisels, bodkins, (or a tool similar to a bodkin,) also arrow-heads or barbs, such as are used by the Indians in their wild state where they cannot get guns, also chips and pieces of copper, apparently left from the manufacture of the above named tools.

We have examined some of the tools and implements, and have in our possession a knife obtained from the excavation referred to.—Large pine trees stood over the place where the knife was obtained, at least one hundred years old. How long the knife and other implements had lain there is hard to tell, but suppose it must have been several hundred years, as a long time must have elapsed before the river bed of gravel could have been formed, and subsequently changed the soil deposited on the gravel bed to the depth of two feet, and the pine to take root, and grow to be one hundred years old.

The knife referred to is about seven inches long, shank and all, the shank two and a half inches and the blade four and a half inches long. It is made of copper, with pieces of silver attached, as we see in specimens procured from the mines now being worked in the country. In shape the knife corresponds very well to those generally used, and preferred by the natives of the country, viz, with an oval blade. It also appears to be a fancy knife, tipped off with silver from point to shank: it is also very hard for copper, so much so that it is difficult to bend it without breaking.

This fact goes to show that the manufacturer, whoever he may have been, understood the process of hardening copper. The same fact holds good in relation to the other implements. To prove the fact that these implements had been hardened, and that their hardness is not due to any chemical change that might have taken place subsequent to their deposit in the river bed, we have only to compare them with the shavings and chips found with them, and probably a part of the original piece from which they were manufactured.

These chips or shavings are perfectly malleable, the same as we find the native copper obtained from the present mines. Consequently, if any change had taken place, it must have, or probably would have produced a corresponding change in the chips or shavings. In fact the existence of these shavings proves that they must have had some tools harder than the malleable copper, and thinner than those ordinarily made of stone, as some of these shavings are very thin, and have the appearance of being cut with some sharp tool. The socket to the chisel or bodkin, (for we know of no better name to call it,) was formed by hammering the copper out flat, and turning this, form the socket.—The socket is not welded or soldered, proving that the manufacturer did not understand that art.

The present native races in the country have no knowledge of the people who manufactured these implements, and worked the copper mines of Lake Superior hundreds of years ago. At the mouth of the river above referred to are abundant evidences to show that there has been a town or village there many years ago.

These evidences consist in the fact that lines of houses can be traced by the stone and clay intermingled that formed their chimneys and fire places. The outlines of the buildings are traceable in the ridge of clay that has fallen from their decayed walls. These were probably composed of logs and pointed or plastered with the clay that now indicates their existence.

These indications exist on ground where the forest a few years since waved in its majesty of a hundred years' growth, but now have given way to other occupants, hitherto unknown in that land. The strong probability is that the inhabitants of these dwellings were the manufacturers of the implements above referred to, and that they were lost in the river by them, while engaged in the common avocations of life.—Lake Superior Journal.

The slaveholders of Jackson county, Missouri, have warned the ministers of the Methodist church not to hold their conference, according to appointment, in that city. Among the resolutions was the following:

Resolved, That if the ministers and others constituting said conference, should, after this respectful remonstrance, persist in holding the same here, we shall hold ourselves acquitted from any consequences that may result therefrom.

It is about twenty years since the Methodist preachers and laity of western Missouri met with the rest of the border outlaws, at that same place, to pass similar resolutions against the Mormons, and enforced the resolutions, by tearing down the Mormon printing office, plundering a large store of goods.

They pursued the matter to the final expulsion of the Mormons from the State, which was not accomplished till they had murdered some fifty, and imprisoned numbers. These we suppose ought not to be called Methodist savages. But what shall we call it, when their comrades like the change to their lips?

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 15.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, NOV. 1, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 82.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$3.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (13 lines) for three insertions, and 35 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

To James J. Strang, Presiding Officer of the Church on Beaver Island.

I received a letter from some brethren at Kirtland, Ohio, the 11th inst., notifying a conference for all the saints that felt disposed to send delegates to a conference, to be held October 6th, and to continue until such business was disposed of as should come before it; among which is to take into consideration the propriety of selecting a committee of three to go to Kansas, or such place as may be agreed upon, to select a location for the scattered saints to gather to, to agree, if possible, upon the word of God, and to see if union cannot be brought about among the saints, by all conforming to the law of God, &c.

The letter is signed by Wm. Smith, Martin Harris and Chilion Daniels, in behalf of the saints. I have seen Chilion Daniels this summer, he has been as far east as St. Lawrence Co., N. Y.

He thinks the Lord has called him to collect all the scattered saints, or as many as possible, and raise up the church for the last time, to be called the bride, the Lamb's wife.—Whether the conference will be asked to conform to his views, I am not informed; it will not wholly if it conforms to the word of God, and if any thing is likely to go wrong, to sow any more tares in the church, and distract it by divisions, I pray God that it may be nipped in the bud, and bring no more evil fruit into the vineyard of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I was requested to inform all the branches and brethren that I knew concerning the conference, and do so. The whole church have but one real interest. May they follow the true one. Truth is still moving on, though slowly, where I have been laboring in word and doctrine. I have baptized two new converts at Erie, and one old one. I expect to baptize two at least at my next appointment, a few miles north of me in Bloomfield. Bro. Wright and Bro. Savage will know them.—They used to live in Canada—names are Dingman. I wish to ask you a few questions, and for you to give me your views on them.

For a man or woman to be baptized for their dead friends, is it necessary that they have once observed the marriage covenant?

For a man to possess the fullness of God's glory in the eternal kingdom, is it necessary for him to be sealed to a woman?

Is the purity and chastity of the marriage covenant for the good of God's creatures here, or wholly for their glory hereafter?

When Zion is set up, and being still weak, comes into dispersion and bondage, when she goes out of the city into the field and from the field to Babylon where the Lord will deliver her, in what manner and how will the Lord deliver Zion?

"Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon."

How shall she deliver herself?

If you see my brother Warren, please to say to him that we are all well.

Yours in the truth,

STEPHEN POST.

The foregoing letter reached here and was handed us early in October, but of course too late to take any notice of it previous to the 6th. If William Smith, Martin Harris and Chilion Daniels are Presidents of the Church, the call of a Conference by them is valid, and the saints ought to respond to it. Those who acknowledge their authority, of course attended. We have no curiosity as to how many assembled.

Such a Conference as they could call together would of course need a committee to look up a place for gathering, if they ever found such a place. God sanctifies a place for his people. They want a revelation, instead of a committee.

As for agreeing upon the word of God, if any number should agree that any particular word was the word of God, their argument would not make it so; and if they should fail to agree upon that which is really his word, their disagreement would not diminish its authority.—

Agree upon the word of God!

What nonsense. The celebrated John Wesley was once in a sharp discussion with his sister, on some question about the authority of human institutions for church government. Forgetting argument he asserted dogmatically, "I tell you, sister, the voice of the people is the voice of God." How truly did she reply, "Yes, THEY CRIED CRUCIFY HIM, CRUCIFY HIM!" It is no wonder that men as lost as these callers of this Conference should talk of agreeing upon the word of God.

Harmony does not need to be brought about. It already exists "among the saints, by all conforming to the law of God."—It is apostates only who are destitute of this harmony, and the only thing they will ever agree in is speaking evil of and persecuting the saints.

The prayer against the Conference going wrong and thereby sowing tares in and distracting the church, and producing evil fruit in the vineyard, is a work of supererogation. Let them distract; it will only be themselves. Let them sow tares; it is not in the church. Let them produce evil fruit; it is for their own eating. The church have nothing to do with any of these things. Why should the saints grudge them to those who take delight in nothing else. Since they are given to their idols, why not let them alone? Why covet the poor comfort their gathering together will bring them?

It is true the whole church have but one real interest. But if any body believes that persons who, like Wm. Smith, have been cut off, after a fair open trial, with confronting witnesses, on proof of a long series of fornications and adulteries, are any part of that whole church, such an one is yet in the gall of bitterness and the bonds of iniquity. If any one thinks that in thus condemning Smith the church did him injustice, we shall not take the trouble to convince him. Such an one has only to act according to his opinion, by receiving Smith in his house. If three months does not fully convince him, we consent to be damned for slandering him.

Mr. Strang desires us to answer brother Post's questions, as follows:

1st. To be baptized for the dead, the candidate must be in some way a legal member of a properly ordered family, and not a mere solitary individual.

2d. It is never necessary for a man to be sealed to a woman. Women are sealed to men. For the rest, God has commanded man, "Be ye fruitful, and multiply and replenish the earth," and has forbidden fornication.—We take it as very clear that the servants obtain more of honor and glory by obeying all the commandments.

3d. The asking of this question is an astonishment. Who needs yet to be told that impurity and unchastity are utterly destructive of all happiness in this life? as well as of the hopes of the everlasting life?

4th. If brother Post was here he would get the answer to this question from day to day, as the emergency arises. This answer has always been sufficient for us. We have always been delivered, and therefore have learned to "fret not ourselves because of evil doers," knowing that the arm of the Lord is always sufficient. Apostates always expect, and half believing saints fear that soon our enemies will prevail, and Zion will not be delivered. We have learned to trust in God, who says he will not give his kingdom to other people, but that it shall stand forever.

Daring Wholesale Robbery.

The people along Lake Michigan, from here north to the Manitowish, have been thrown into a state of the most intense excitement by the operations of a gang of marauders, who are reported to be Mormons from Beaver Island, and who have carried on their operations with a boldness, coolness and desperation rarely equalled in the records of highwaymen. They are reported to have burned saw mills and robbed stores north of the Grand River. At Grand Haven they made repeated attempts to break into stores and shops.

On Saturday of last week they made their appearance at the mouth of the Kalamazoo, and after looking about some, pushed up south as far as the tanneries in the town of Ganges, and on Saturday night broke open Robinson & Plummer's store, robbed them of $1,600 worth of goods; and made back again down the lake. Off Port Sheldon they were seen by a vessel's crew anchored there, with their plunder all open to view, and were pulling on down as carelessly and fearlessly as though they were pursuing a legitimate calling.

There is said to be upwards of 30 in the gang. They sail one small schooner of 20 or 30 tons, and two Mackinac boats. Robinson & Plummer pursued them as far north as Grand Haven, and then turned back; the Haven people advising them that it would be useless and unsafe to pursue them further without a strong force of hundreds of men. What is to be done in the premises we do not hear.—Surely we have come upon strange times if such high handed robberies can be perpetrated and go unwhipped of justice. There seems to be no question as to the identity of the robbers or their hailing place. They are emissaries from King Strang's Realm, and the whole power of the State should be lent to ferret out and bring to justice the perpetrators of such bold crime.—Allegan Record, Oct. 1.

We copy the foregoing in pursuance of a rule we have of copying every attack made upon the people of this place, through the public press, which comes to our knowledge. A few things in it we shall remark upon, and leave it to assume its proper value as a part of the history of the times.

The senior editor of the Record is Mr. Hawkes, Inspector of Light Houses on the Upper Lakes. It is not above two months since he visited this place, in the course of his official duties, called repeatedly on Mr. Strang, invited him to dine aboard his vessel, and extended to him every courtesy he could have extended to any gentleman, even the President of the United States.

In an ordinary case we should speak of nothing further, but in reply to such an attack as this it is not improper to add, in order to satisfy those who may think such courtesies a mere outside show, that Mr. Hawkes had to deliver supplies, government property, to the amount of several hundred dollars, some sixteen miles from here, and being much behind time, and the wind against him, did not find it convenient to go there.

He, Mr. Hawkes, Inspector of Light Houses, editor of the Allegan Record, therefore delivered the government property into the hands of King Strang, and went his way, trusting to this chief of pirates to do his official duty of inspecting the Light House and supplying it, and to examine the public property on hand and see that it corresponded with the inventory returned by the Keeper, and was properly cared for.

This done, and Mr. Strang wanting an official document of some kind with his name to it, Mr. Hawkes sets down to Mr. Strang's table, and instead of writing the document, signed his name officially at the bottom of a page of a blank sheet, saying, "you can fill it out to suit yourself," and talked on; and within four weeks of this time Mr. Hawkes says, in his paper, the Allegan Record: "There seems to be no question as to the identity of the robbers, or their hailing place. They are emissaries from King Strang's Realm." In other words, persons sent out by King Strang to rob, plunder and waste.

If there is one word of truth in this, what kind of a citizen, what kind of public officer is Mr. Hawkes? If it is false, what kind of an editor, what kind of a witness is he?

To the Allegan Record we have no further reply. To its readers it is proper to say that the Record is a regular exchange of the Islander, but that the No. for Oct. 1st, containing this attack, was not sent to this office, being the only No. which has failed of reaching us since the Record was on our exchange list, and we accidentally fell upon its article in the "New York Times."

For the facts above stated, an inspection of the files at the proper office at Washington will show that the supplies for the Beaver Island Light House (sixteen miles from this place) were receipted by Mr. Strang, and not by the Keeper; and if Mr. Hawkes will deny in the columns of the Record giving Mr. Strang his official signature at the bottom of a blank sheet, we will obtain the document, and send it to Allegan for public inspection.

As the New York Daily Times, of Oct. 10th, has, by copying, given currency to the Record's article, we reply to the Times, if any such bold piracies are being carried on against the immense commerce of the Lakes, it becomes a matter of national government. If a gang of twenty men have a schooner of twenty or thirty tons and two Mackinac boats pirating on Lake Michigan "as boldly as though they were carrying on a legitimate business," less than a week would suffice to ferret out and capture every soul of them.

There are no rough, broken, rugged shores, no narrow, crooked bays, no intricate channels among Islands, and no hidden harbors about the Lake as places of rendezvous or refuge. All the Lake for two hundred miles around where these piracies are alleged to have been committed presents a moderately curved and even shore line, without bays or headlands, and no harbors but the mouths of rivers, all of which are occupied by towns or villages, or large lumbering establishments.

More than one hundred steamers and more than five hundred sail craft, manned by more than three thousand sailors, are employed in the carrying trade of this part of the Lake. Every part of it is a common highway, traversed daily by numerous vessels of all classes. The statement that in such a place twenty men, with a small schooner and two boats, are pirating as boldly as though engaged in legitimate business, is merely ridiculous.—It carries its refutation with it.

We do not doubt however that the specific acts of waste and robbery along that shore, spoken of by the Record, and numerous others not named in it, have been committed; and cannot but anticipate that they will continue more and more until the gang engaged in them is broken up. Whether that gang hail from King Strang's Dominions, or are strung along the shore from Grand Haven to Manitowish, we are content to leave to the public judgment, whenever, giving up vituperation, they go to work deliberately to ferret them out. If for the mere pleasure of charging these acts to the Mormons the sufferers are willing to suffer, we are content. While the gang are preying upon them with impunity and unsuspected, we are at peace. A few years since, when the same gang were camped in this region, they kept the country in continual uproar, waged civil war against us, and only barely failed of driving us all out of the country.

In our last issue we copied a somewhat similar article from the Grand Haven Times, giving one Dave Moon as its authority for charging these crimes on the Mormons. The Dave Mob and some of his set, men who escaped from Emmet and Manistee counties under indictment for similar crimes, now reside at Grand Haven, at which place the Record says the Mormons (who live two hundred miles away) have repeatedly made repeated attempts to break into stores and shops. We submit the question to all the world, which is the more probable, that industrious men, farmers, merchants and traders who have in the last six years settled, organized and established flourishing and profitable business throughout two counties, should go two hundred miles to such a town as Grand Haven, "to break into stores and shops," or that such a gang as Dave Moon, Sam Martin and their associates, nominally engaged in fishing, but always moting in crime, should merely cross the river to do it? Any man who, under such circumstances, could hesitate where to look, ought to have property stolen by his nearest neighbors, and never suspect them. It would only be just punishment for indulging such blinding prejudices. Those who can see and won't see, deserve punishment for not seeing, and in this case seem destined to get more than enough of it.

Between fifty and seventy-five of the gang of marauders who infested all the region about the Straits and Islands several years back, and made the country hideous with their crimes and their howls, are now distributed in small parties at the mouths of all the rivers from Grand Haven to Manistee. A few linger about their old haunts at Grand Traverse, apparently cowed down by the increase of civilized settlements. Considerable numbers are scattered in small parties about Green Bay, and the Islands at its entrance. Others are up Lake Superior, and still others in California.

All who remain about the Lakes ostensibly follow fishing, or some business connected with it, though most of them are located in indifferent fishing regions. But that makes an ostensible employment, and is reason for possessing boats. Along the east shore of Lake Michigan vessels can enter very few of the rivers, but boats enter without difficulty, and can go far up the rivers into the unbroken forests.

Near the mouths of all these streams are saw mills. At the mouths of these rivers the members of these gangs build shanties, and make a pretence of fishing. Going out at all hours of day and night on pretence of setting or lifting nets, no one knows their range. Banded together by the tie of common profits and common crimes, they all assist one another. This inter-communication furnishes them all necessary information for finding and facilities for hiding their plunder.

We do not imagine for a moment that they employ a schooner, or that their marauding habits rise to the rank of piracy. It is mere long shore stealing.

If it was certain however that a schooner was really employed in the business, that fact would exonerate the Mormons. They have no schooner. There is not a boat of any kind above the class of a fish boat sailing from any of the Mormon settlements in or around Lake Michigan, nor manned by Mormons sailing from any place on the Lake.

The Seaman, formerly owned here, has run the entire season between Drummond Island, Lake Huron, and Sault Ste Marie. The Dolphin ran a part of the season between Saint James and the Fox Islands, but previous to these alleged robberies was hauled out as unseaworthy, and is being broken up. No other schooner has been owned or run by Mormons since the wreck of the Spencer, in 1850. The largest boat owned or run by Mormons since August is the mail boat "Maid of the Mist," of two and a half tons.

If a schooner has been employed in any way in these maraudings, it must be looked for somewhere else. In 1853 a statement went the rounds of the papers generally that the Mormons had stolen six or seven hundred barrels of fish, salt, &c, from the north shore, some twenty-five miles from here. McMath and others at Mackinac procured an assault upon us on these allegations, in the columns of the Detroit Free Press and New York Tribune.

Investigation showed that the theft was of forty or fifty barrels instead of six or seven hundred, and that it was done by the sloop Mary Clark, of twenty or thirty tons, built in Chicago for a yacht, but then owned and sailed by members of this gang, with the name painted off, and "Defiance" painted on over it. This sloop has been re-fitted as a schooner, and so far as we know remains in the same hands, used principally as other vessels of that class are, but provided with a crew adapted to occasional thieving, when an opportunity occurs. She is the best sailer of her class on the Lakes.

MACKINAC FISHERIES.

A correspondent of the Toledo Blade, in writing from Mackinac, gives a statement of the fisheries thereabouts. He states the quantity of fish packed and shipped at Mackinac so far the present season, as 14,193 barrels. Taking former years as a criterion, the amount which will be put up during the entire season will be 21,000 barrels. Beaver Islands pack 1,500 barrels, Birch Point 300 barrels, making a total from the Straits of Mackinac of 22,800 barrels. The correspondent says: "The average of trout and white-fish this year is about equal. Last year the trout were the most abundant. The amount of fish taken last year was nearly one third less than the present season, and in fact this year has been the most profitable season for the fishermen of any since 1847, from the fact that fish are plenty and prices high."—Detroit Free Press.

This must have been got up for the special benefit of Mackinac. In the year ending May, 1854, the amount of fish caught and packed at the Beaver Islands was, by the official returns, twenty thousand eight hundred and sixty-four barrels.

A pretty comparison one thousand five hundred barrels from Beaver Island to twenty-one thousand from Mackinac. Before the people of Mackinac joined in the crusade against the Mormons they caught more fish at Beaver Islands than all other places. The loss of this trade is one of the least of the evils they have brought on themselves. But they will find it dull business lying down the amount of our fish business to one thousand five hundred barrels, when several single dealers purchase more than that.

Our readers will remember that a few weeks since the Pontiac Gazette had an article about the theft of six horses in Oakland county, charging that one span were brought here on a propeller, and saying all sorts of foolish things about the Mormons because the horses were not found, though the Mormons furnished every facility for the search; and that we convicted the Gazette of falsehood in nearly every word it said, and that in the main it owed us.

Capt. Gibson, of the propeller Plymouth, and his Clerk, Mr. Ellis, inform us that these horses have been found in Milwaukee, and recovered. They were landed at Milwaukee, instead of Beaver Island. As the people of Milwaukee are mostly Roman Catholics we suppose the Gazette will now withdraw all its hard words, and charge the people of Milwaukee with being a den of Roman Catholic thieves.

The Northern Islander, of Thursday, Sept. 13th, a paper published by the Mormons, at Saint James, Beaver Island, contains about two columns and a half of matter, which is intended to annihilate this paper. It purports to be a defence of "Capt. S. Alexander, Master propeller Iowa," in relation to certain charges heretofore made by the Express, concerning the stealing of a span of horses, by the Captain of a certain propeller—the Express never having hinted that the "valorous" manœuvre of the rider of Bucephalus was the target of its just arrows. The article was probably written by "Capt. S. Alexander, Master propeller Iowa" himself. It at least, bears his earmarks—being low, pointless, abusive, and bungling. We can assure the gallant and kind hearted Captain (overhaul the accounts of the loss of the Bucephalus, on this point) that his spleen and his Mormonistic eloquence are of little effect as far as we are concerned; and we cordially advise him to save the money that he is compelled to yield up for the sake of making himself ridiculous in print, for some less public if not less grateful gratification.—Buffalo Express.

The Express could judge the intention of the Islander only by the fact. The Islander did not purport to defend Capt. Alexander. We have no interest in his defence, and so long as he is attacked only by the Express, do not imagine that he needs any assistance.

We attacked the Express as we do every foul enemy of decency festering on the surface of society, for demanding "black mail," and insinuating the accusation of crimes against such as refuse to pay it.

We detected the Express in demanding of a gentleman in an honorable profession to pay Five Point bills for its "items man," &c, as the price of being let alone, and accusing him of complicity in horse stealing in revenge for refusing him the price. We detected the Express in shirking out of the responsibility of this slander by the miserable quibble that it had not named the accused, though it pointed him out so that every child knew who was intended; and we find it still befouling Capt. Alexander from day to day by every kind of left hand threat, though it dare not avow and cannot disavow that he is the man intended. The Express in due form confesses that it was very anxious to accuse Capt. A. of complicity in horse stealing, but did not dare exactly say it because it was an abominable lie, and so only said what every one of its readers would understand to mean that.

And such a paper claims to be the organ of all the morality and all the decency of Buffalo.

Free Love Societies are springing up throughout the United States, advocating the right of every woman, married or single, to bear children by whom she pleases. This is the natural result of the doctrine that marriage is only a civil contract.

CHILD STEALING.

Our readers will recollect a report, copied in the Islander from the Chicago Journal, saying the Mormons had been to Grand Traverse trying to steal a child, to make him king at Beaver Island; and that they renewed the attempt in the night following, and one of them was shot.

The Indian farmer at Grand Traverse informs us, that the child stealing was a mere joke, practiced by two squaws on a neighboring white woman. The night attempt was a few specimens of young Americas, genuine Grand Traverse growth, out stealing water melons, in a neighbor's garden.

Those who believe with the Grand River Times and Allegan Record that the Mormons went with a fish boat on the open Lake two hundred and fifty miles, to rob a tannery, will also think the young Mormons went to Grand Traverse, eighty miles, to steal water melons, and the old ones to steal a child for their king.

The Allegan Record congratulates itself and is wonderful thankful upon the Report of the Coast Survey for 1855, and puffs Professor Bache, the Superintendent, as though favors were coming from that quarter.

The matter-of-fact Superintendent must feel highly complimented by the praise of one who mistakes two years of progress in reviewing his labors. The report for 1855 will not be made up at the office earlier than next February, and that of 1854 is not yet distributed. Men of science have generally been thankful for the report of 1853, the past summer. We have two copies lying by us, and a most valuable work it is. It is a matter of serious regret that the Lake Survey reports could not be got out in the same style.

The work on the Lake Survey has ceased for this season. The work about the Beaver Islands is all done, except the deep soundings and the triangulation which makes the connection with the Fox Islands and the distant main lands.

When the charts are prepared from this work the facilities of navigation about the Islands will be greatly increased. Several good channels have been discovered where heretofore none were supposed to exist.

We believe the work about the Straits is also complete, and that the charts of that part are in a forward state, if not complete.

Our harbor of late has had the appearance of a commercial mart of the first class. Hardly two days have passed in two weeks without a large fleet in. Last Tuesday morning eighteen first class brigs and schooners, and five steamers were lying in the harbor, and half as many more at anchor under the lee of the Island.

At one time there were more steamers here than could lay along the wharves, and the Michigan was obliged to drop her anchor in the harbor and wait her turn.

With three hundred sailors here at once, not a man was seen intoxicated—not a quarrel or brawl of any kind—not one word of disagreement between citizens and sailors. Without the slightest opportunity of dissipation, good order is as natural as in-clock work.

The agricultural papers are in raptures about a new mode of grafting by setting the scion, or rather a cutting, in a potatoe, and planting the potatoe with a bud of the cutting above ground. The discovery is credited to a Boerian gardener.

To us it is nothing new. We have practiced it twenty-five years, and can show trees bearing ten bushels a year, produced by this process. In fact it is not grafting, but producing from cuttings, to which the potatoe secures moisture only.

MANLY.—The Marshall Exponent publishes from the Allegan Record the account of the long shore stealing about Grand Haven, leaving out the miserable trash about the Mormons. Good sense on that subject is so rare as to deserve especial notice.

A severe press of book work, which must be done before the Editors leave on their missions, will compel us to miss publication two weeks.

The Islander will be issued during the winter once a month.

Chicago is a "great" place. Two Ministers of the Gospel were arrested there last week—one for drunkenness and the other for stealing a horse and buggy.—Marshall Exponent.

What says the Allegan Record? Were they emissaries from King Strang's dominions?

A new Mormon paper has been issued at Puget's Sound. We presume it is Brighamite, but have not seen it.

MISTRANSLATIONS OF THE ENGLISH BIBLE.

No. 1. Luke xxiii. 32. CHRIST made a malefactor! "And there were also two other malefactors led with him to be put to death;" instead of "two others, malefactors." The Greek reads simply, And two others, evil-doers.

Judges xv. 4. Three hundred foxes tied tail to tail; instead of wheaten sheaves placed end to end! "And Samson went and caught three hundred foxes, and took firebrands, and turned tail to tail, and put a firebrand in the midst between the two tails." The Hebrew is, "And Sampson went and gathered three hundred sheaves of wheat, and taking torches and turning (the sheaves) end to end, set a torch in the midst between two ends."

1 Kings xvii. 6. ELIJAH not fed by ravens, but by Arabs! "And the ravens brought him bread and flesh," &c. In the Hebrew, "And the ORBIM (aRaB-im) brought him bread and flesh." Kennicott thinks Orbim, inhabitants of Oreb, or Orbe—"ville in finibus Arabum," says St. Jerome: but, Arabs seems to us more natural and correct. In no contingency

In the following examples we give the text first according to the common English. When repeated, it is after the Doway:

Job xxxii. 35. "On that one would hear me! behold, my desire is, that the Almighty would answer me, and that mine adversary had written a book."

Who would grant me a hearer, that the Almighty may hear my desire: and that he himself who judgeth would write a book."

Can human intelligence understand what possible connection Job's supplication, that God should reply to him, can have with his individual craving that his unnamed enemy should have indited a book? Were these words authentic, logic could prove:

1. That, at least 2500 years ago, polemical works in the form of "books" were not unknown even in Arabia.

2. That, inasmuch as Job could have no benevolent motive in such wish, vexed as he felt at the aggravations heaped upon his distressing afflictions by his proverbial comforters, and knowing, as he must necessarily have done, the power which a reviewer has over an author, he longed, with vindictive refinement, as the most terrible retribution to be inflicted upon an adversary, that his particular enemy should actually write a book, in order that Job might review him.

Cohen renders— "Alas! that I have not one who hears!—Behold my writing—let the Almighty answer me—and the book edited by my adverse party."

This version is unsatisfactory, because among other oversights it does not afford due weight to the word TaU; vaguely rendered "sign" or "mark" in Ezekiel ix. 4. TaU is the name of the last letter in the post-christian square-letter alphabet of the Jews; which, 142 years B. C., on the earlier Maccabee coinage was cruciform; sometimes like the Latin, at others like the Greek cross.

At the time that Ezekiel wrote in Chaldea, during the sixth century B. C., this cruciform letter was the one he must have used, no less than the shape of that "mark" which should be stamped upon the foreheads of the righteous. Its etymological and figurative meaning was "benediction" or "absolution;" just what its descendant, the "baptismal sign" (drawn with water on the foreheads of infants) signifies at this day. Ezekiel's TaU has no direct relation, beyond a distant resemblance in shape and perhaps an occult one in hierophantic mysteries, to the "Crux Ansata," or "sign" for "Ankh," eternal life, of the more ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics; but its original is now-a-days producible on the cuneiform monuments of Syria.

The following free rendering indicates a probable solution of its tortured passage.

Says Job, "Who will give me of that will listen to me? [i. e., my judge.] Behold! (here) my TaU [i. e., he holds up] personally the cruciform emblem, as his "absolution." The omnipotent will answer for me [i. e., be my surety, that I seek not to evade,] and now let my opponent write down his charge.

Psalms lxxviii. 41.

"Yea, they turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel."

"And they turned back and tempted God, and grieved the Holy One of Israel."

Bad as the Jews were, in this case they did precisely the contrary! "The Psalmist," celebrates in this canticle the marvels which the Lord had done in behalf of rebellious Israel; nevertheless, as the latter finished by conversion, God pardons him and spreads over the culprit the most ample bounties. Conversion, therefore, is the import of this verse, and then it is said:

"they (became) converted, they supplicated the Puissant, and implored TaU, [i. e., "absolution," or "benediction"] of the Holy One of Israel."

1. Samuel xxi. 10—15.

"And David arose, and fled that day for fear of Saul, and went to Achish, the king of Gath. And the servants of Achish said unto him, Is not this David, the king of the land? did they not sing one to another of him in dances, saying, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands? And David laid up these words in his heart, and was sore afraid of Achish, the king of Gath. And he changed his behavior before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands, and scratched on the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard. Then said Achish unto his servants, Lo! ye see the man is mad: wherefore then have ye brought him to me? Have I need of madmen, that ye have brought this fellow to play the madman in my presence? shall this fellow come into my house?"

"And David arose, and fled that day from the face of Saul; and came to Achish the king of Gath: And the servants of Achish, when they saw David, said to him: Is not this David the king of the land? Did they not sing to him in their dances, saying: Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands? But David laid up their words in his heart; and was exceedingly afraid at the face of Achish the king of Gath. And he changed his countenance before them, and he spat down between their hands: and he stumbled against the doors of the gate, and his spittle ran down upon his beard. And Achish said to his servants: You saw the man was mad: why have you brought him to me? Have we need of madmen, that you have brought in this fellow, to play the madman in my presence? shall this fellow come into my house?"

David, besides being the warrior-king, was Israel's bard. The LXX (Greek) made a paraphrase at the first verse, and added to the (Hebrew) text by twice mentioning the gates of the city, first to make David play upon his harp, and afterwards to cause him to fall against the said gates. There is perhaps no passage in scripture that has been more completely denaturalized through the obscurity of a single word.

It is evident that David had altogether a part more dignified, more reasonable, to adopt than to counterfeit a lunatic; and moreover that Achish did not display great esteem for his court by saying that madmen were not wanting in it. But the famous TaU, misunderstood, has thrown all interpreters into error. So we will give it its veritable sense of to bless; to this we add that SHAR [in Hebrew, as in vulgar Arabic now] does not signify 'door' in this passage, but poetry, as its Arabic root teaches: PALETH has the value of 'door' in the same sense that Chaldees and Arabs call 'doors' [bab, biban] or 'house' [beyt beyoot] the strophes; that is those commencements of chapters and of strophes that Italians call 'stanze,' and that in English is adopted for poetry in our word stanzas; a word that in Italian, like the above nouns in Oriental speech, has the double meaning of 'stanza' and 'chamber.'

If it be insisted that David was raving, it will be, then, with poetic furor—the prophetic transport that animated him; but the Arabic root SHAGIA, which signifies to exhibit valor, bravery, courage, accords much better with the context. These few rays of light ought to be sufficient to dissipate the thick tenebrosities which translators have piled upon this divine narrative. We may thenceforward give to these verses a reasonable translation, and worthy of the majesty of scripture:—David arose, and fleeing on that day from the presence of Saul, came to Achish, the king of Gath. Then the servants of Achish said to him, And is not this David, king of the earth? is not in his honor that it was sung in chorus, Saul has killed a thousand, and David ten thousand? David, weighing these words in his heart, feared greatly in presence of Achish, king of Gath.

It was for this that in his presence he (David) celebrated their power in a varied hymn, and in inspired verses; and, at each commencement of a strophe he made TaU, [i. e., he made 'benedictions'—he blessed them:] and already the sweat was dripping upon the chin's honor [i. e., on his beard, in Oriental phraseology] when Achish interrupted him, and said to his servant, 'Hearken to this man who comes, the inspired; are poets wanting to me, that you must bring this one to celebrate my power? and shall he come into my house? Nevertheless, David escaped, and took the road that conducted to the cavern of Adullam.

Leviticus xi. 20.

"All fowls that creep, going upon all four shall be an abomination unto you."

"Of things that fly, whatsoever growth upon four feet, shall be abominable to you."

To us, likewise! "Rare aves," invaluable however to museums of Natural History. Not merely, were this prohibition abetted, did four-legged fowls exist in the days of Moses, but the inhibition to eat them would now be worthless to a Caraitic Jew, because the breed is extinct. 'Every winged insect [or, literally, flying-creeping thing] that walks upon four [claws, feet, understood] is an abomination unto you.'

2 Kings, vi. 25.

"And there was a great famine in Samaria: and, behold, they besieged it, until an ass' head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of doves' dung for five pieces of silver."

"And there was a great famine in Samaria: and so long did the siege continue, till the head of an ass was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of pigeons' dung, for five pieces of silver."

"Sternhold and Hopkins had great qualms, When they translated David's psalms."

But the sufferings of these poor men were infinitesimally small compared to those the forty-seven would have experienced had they partaken of that delicate repast, for about two-thirds of a pint of which the starving Samaritans paid such monstrous prices. Pigeon's dung, or "doves' dung," owing to the quantity of ammonia it contains, is still used throughout the East, in the absence of modern chemistry, to give temper to Damascus sword-blades, &c. It sharpens weapons, not appetites.—Can one conceive a human stomach, however depraved by want, alimanted upon "guano?" Bochart, two centuries ago, showed that "pois chiches" in Italian ceci, in English "chick pea,"—the commonest Oriental vetch, or pea—is the rational interpretation of the word; and thus the only enigma preserved is, how forty-seven Englishmen could have committed a mistake so extraordinary. The obsolete word "cab" aptly illustrates how imperative it has become, through unavoidable changes of language within 250 years, to issue a re-translation in our current vernacular.

CAUTION.

On thinking of this subject an old adage presents itself to my mind, viz., "A fool's advice is always given before it is asked." But, for the benefit of the young and rising generation, I make a few remarks, knowing that if we go into the scripture for a sample we find that wise men of old gave their advice even when men refused to hear. Therefore if we place all who give advice before being solicited in the catalogue of fools, it will not apply scripturally, at least.

Young men, if you have parents who are farmers or mechanics, do not despise them because they are not of a different occupation, for honest industry is the jewel of human happiness. Always take the advice of your parents, and get a livelihood by honest industry, and then you have a conscience void of offence, and are justified before God and man.

On the other hand, if you despise their counsel, you become indolent, and are soon looked upon as the floating trash of the earth. You are soon allured with the idea that if you can only get a watch guard about your neck, a walking stick in your hand, a three cent cigar in your mouth, and some honest tailor's coat on your back, that you are a man. Not so. One intelligent, industrious young man, clad in homely attire, is more respected by the wise and good than all these hair brained fops. The one of industrious habits will rise to wealth and fame, and be a comfort to all who form his acquaintance, and all his productions will be to the peace and good order of society. On the other hand, the fop is a disturber of the peace of all with whom he associates, becomes dissipated, and finally to beggary and rags.

Young ladies should learn to be keepers at home, not spinning more street yarn than stocking yarn. You should learn to keep the house and its appurtenances in order, and when you appear in a joyous meeting or a solemn assembly your attire should not have the appearance of having been pitched at you with a pitchfork and partially caught on you.

Beware of transient young men. Never suffer the addresses of a stranger. Remember that five features make fine birds, but that the allurements of a dandy jack, with a watch guard to his person, a walking stick in his paw, a three cent cigar under his nose, an honest tailor's coat on his back, and a brainless though fanciful eranium, is not a good specimen for a foundation of future happiness. Recollect that such a one will not make up for the loss of a good father's home, a good mother's counsel, and the society of brothers and sisters, and the honest and industrious friends with whom you have been associated. Their affections will grow brighter and brighter, while that of such a young man is lost in the wane of a honey moon.

THE ELECTIONS IN NEBRASKA.

Purple, who is "the gentleman from Burt county," just at this time, informed a gentleman of this State, at Chicago a short time since, something how members are gotten up in Nebraska. He said, Cummings, the Secretary, said to me one morning, "Purple we want a member from Burt county." So I harnessed up and took nine fellows with me, and we started for the woods, and when we thought we had got about far enough for Burt county, we unpacked our ballot box and held an election, canvassed the votes, and it was astonishing to observe how great the unanimity at the first election held in Burt county. Purple had every vote. So Purple was declared duly elected, and here I am.—Detroit Advertiser.

Payments for the Islander.

L. D. Tubbs, 75cts. to No. 89; Moses Chase, $2.50, to 102; C. E. Scott, 25cts. to 79; A. Kykendall, $1.00, to 100; A. J. Porter, 50cts. to 80; Sewell Scott, $2.00, to 109; L. B. Richmond, 38cts. to 58; Ansel Lake, $5.00, to 197; Abner Highby, $1.00, to 100; Peter C. Tigert, $2.00, to 120; Francis C. Freeman, $1.00, to 101.

NOTICE.

The Argemone would respectfully announce to his customers and the public generally that he continues to supply the various Magazines named below, at the prices annexed, per annum, viz: Harper, $2.25; Putnam, $2.25; Knickerbocker, $2.25; Household Words, $2; Blackwood, $2.25; Godey, $2.25; Graham, $2.25; Horticulturalist, colored plates, $3.50; Horticulturalist, plain edition, $1.63; Little's Living Age, $3; Frank Leslie's Gazette of Fashions, $2.25; Bell's Picture Palace, $2.50; Ladies Repository, Cincinnati, $1.63; National, $1.63; Artisan's Home Magazine, $1.63.

He is prepared also to fill orders for standard and miscellaneous books and the current literature of the day, whether from the trade or persons in other walks of industry. Having had an experience of fifteen years in the Book and Periodical Trade, he believes that he can give entire satisfaction to all parties intrusting him with orders.

Specimen numbers of the Magazine sent on the receipt of six Post Office Letter stamps, for the $2 or $2 Magazine, and for twelve such stamps a sample of the $3 or $5 works will be sent. Letters of inquiry must contain a stamp for the return of postage.

Address, WILLIAM PATTON.

Bookseller, Hubbard, New Jersey.

*Publishers of Newspapers giving the advertisement (with this notice) a low insertion, and sending marked copy to advertiser, will be entitled to any one of the Periodicals in above list for one year.

NEW RAILROAD MAP.

Just published by A. Ranney, 195 Broadway, N. Y., Ben & Stern's New Railroad Map of the United States and the Canadas, compiled from the latest surveys and locations, by Zerah Colburn, Esq., editor of the Railroad Advertiser.

This map shows at a glance all the completed and projected Railroads; also, those in progress. In completeness and accuracy, I am prepared to offer it in comparison with any work of the kind ever produced in this country. Size, 29 by 37 inches, handsomely bordered and mounted, and will be sold at the following prices: Mounted on Rollers, $1.25; bound in pocket form, gilt, 63c; in sheets, beautifully colored, 37c.

Agents wanted to sell this map in all parts of the United States and Canadas, to whom a liberal discount will be made. Sample copy, in sheet or pocket form, sent by mail post paid upon receipt of price. Apply to or address, A. RANNEY, Publisher, 195 Broadway, New York City.

Editors copying the above shall receive a copy of the map free of postage. A. R.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns. Mous de Laine and Battons. Lawns, Shawls, &c. A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish.

Book and Barred Muslins. Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores.

Stores of the most approved pattern and material, for sale. 68aa.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES.

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST.

J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Nail-rods, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused.

He has also on hand a large assortment of Clocks, Watches, Jewelry, Yankee Notions, &c.

Saint James, June 19th, 1855. 70a90a.

The Packet "Maid of the Mist" will make weekly trips from Saint James to Galilee, Patmos, Charlevoix and Arbour Croche, carrying the mail. She has excellent accommodations for passengers.

NATURE'S MUSIC.

There is music in the gentle breeze,
That warbles lightly through the trees,
And fans the frail and fragrant flower,
In the open field, and wild-wood bower.

There is music in the silvery stream,
Whose murmuring waters brightly gleam,
When dancing in the sun-beams bright,
Or in the moon's pale silvery light.

There is music in the breezy wood,
Where the lofty monarchs long have stood,
And graved the blasts of the driving gale,
On the woody height, in the flowery vale.

There is music too in the insect's hum,
When the day has gone and the night has come,
And o'erspread the earth with a sable pall,
Its darkening shroud is spread o'er all.

There is music in the forest dells,
Where undisturbed rude nature dwells,
To list to the sound of the floating breeze,
As it fans the flower, and sways the trees.

There is music in the thunder's roar,
As its echo rolls from shore to shore,
And fills the heart with awe and dread,
Yea, shakes the rest of the slumbering dead.

There is music in the old ocean's breast,
As its bosom heaves, then sinks to rest,
Or dashes its waves, with an angry roar,
'Gainst the rugged cliffs of the rock-bound shore.

There is music in all the earth and sea,
In the sound of Nature's minstrelsy;
To list to the sound of Nature's voice,
As it bids the sorrowing heart rejoice.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Galesburg, Oct. 18, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER:—In accordance with your request I proceed to write you a series of letters narrating many incidents of my life, since I became a member of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I was born in the State of Missouri, county of Washington, Nov. 20, 1810, where I lived until the fall of 1838, respected by all who knew me. In the spring season of 1838 Benjamin L. Clapp, an Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the first I had ever seen or heard of, visited that part of the country, preaching what the world calls Mormonism.

I was then a member of the Methodist church, in which I had been a member ten months. I had been a public speaker in that society for some time previous to the arrival of B. L. Clapp. And on that occasion I was solicited by a brother Methodist to attend Clapp's appointment to preach, and correct him in his error, as it was called. I attended. It was the most stormy night of lightning and thunder that I had ever seen.—When I entered the house Clapp was reading from a book. I seated myself close to him. In a few moments he laid down the book, and stepped to the door. I took up the book out of curiosity, to see what book it was. I opened it at the chapter where the account is given of Alma and Amulek, and the burning of the woman and children. I read a few lines. It was the Book of Mormon.

I can say in truth I believed every word I read. Clapp preached upon the first principles of the gospel. At the finishing of his discourse he gave liberty for any remarks for or against what he had said. I arose and told the Methodist brethren I had no corrections for the preacher, but I had a few words of advice to them; and from that night I was called a Mormon, which proved a true saying; for on the thirteenth of that same month, which was March, I was baptized and confirmed by and under the hands of B. L. Clapp.

I was the first in that county that joined the church, and from that day the spirit of the evil one in that county manifested itself against those who received the truth, and the spirit of mobocracy began to show itself. The ministers of the different denominations joined in the hue and cry of "delusion, false prophet," &c.

So good a man was I while among them, that I could have taken one thousand dollars a year to go and preach to the Indians.—But, Oh, how changed the scene. I was now deceived and deceiving. I was shunned by them, they all the while lying about the Mormons, until I gave public challenge through the county to discuss their principles and mine according to the scriptures; and also to defend my character by law, and would from that day forward prosecute each and every man who took my name in vain; for I was living where I was known from the cradle, and the only charge they could bring against me was "fist-cuffing" in by gone days, and that all men had accounted honorable in an honorable way. But the only thing they had against me was that I had received the truth, and was after them for preaching false doctrine.

I was all alone. Clapp left three weeks after my baptism, and returned to Far West. The day before he left he baptized my father, my wife and three other females, and organized a branch. I was ordained, and left to preside over it. I continued to hold meetings every Sunday at my father's house. Many began to believe.—Persecution increased accordingly. At one time while I was preaching a crowd of ten or a dozen rowdies, who had seated themselves together, drew their pistols and commenced loading them, and swearing what they would do if I did not stop.

I told them that I was attending to my own business, and would not ask them when I should stop; that I was the Lord's freeman, and would stop preaching when I chose. I then called upon A. Gafforth, Esq., a Justice of the Peace, to take them in his care. He said it would raise a row. I told him I was prepared for it, and would meet the worst. I then ordered them to leave the house, or I would prosecute every man of them. Upon which they pocketed their pistols. When preaching was ended the congregation retired to the river, a short distance, where I was going to baptize a young man.

While I was performing the ordinance they were baptizing a dog in the name of Jo Smith, as they were pleased to call the Lord's prophet. I then began to realize the saying of Jesus: "He that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." When the most of the congregation began to disperse, they warned me not to hold any more meetings. I told them they were not my directors, and I should continue to preach as long as one soul would come to hear; and as for their threats, I did not regard them; that I was there, and there was my property; commence when they chose, and I would take vengeance on them by day and by night; that I desired peace on honorable terms, or not at all; that I desired peace, but if war must come they were in for their part of the suffering, and coming time would tell who suffered for the sake of the gospel.

I told them I could walk the soil that gave me birth, and rejoice in God. I had never dishonored it. When I had ended these sayings they dispersed, with many curses and threats on the damned Mormon, as they called me. But we did rejoice that we were accounted worthy to endure persecution for the truth's sake. And we had reason to rejoice for the blessings of God poured out upon us. We continued steadfast in the truth, and contended earnestly for the faith delivered to the saints.

Notwithstanding the influence of wicked men and the power of the devil, our numbers did increase, and in the space of four months we increased from six to nineteen, which gave us great joy; and we did enjoy the gifts of the gospel, as promised by the Lord Jesus.—And notwithstanding my youth in the gospel, there was not a minister of any denomination that would discuss with me the principles I professed. They would sometimes come to my meetings, and generally go away and misrepresent what was said. All manner of lies were current among them, but we were humble before the Lord and united, and cared but little for their lies or threats.

Myself and brother Hewitt, who had joined us that summer, were preparing to move to Far West that fall, to which place we started about the first September the same year, a distance of three hundred and fifteen miles. I settled my affairs, and having been advised by letter to take all the cattle I could, I laid out all my means in that way, and about the first September left the place I had lived twenty-seven years and ten months.—My family consisted of my wife and two children, my two sons who are now with me, one in his fifth and the other in his second year.

Brother Hewitt's family consisted of himself, wife, one child one year old, and one black boy, fourteen years old. This was my first move over thirty miles I had undertaken in my life. Hewitt had taken none. It seemed an undertaking to leave all on earth with whom I was acquainted, with the exception of the above named, and cast my lot among strangers, all to enjoy the society of those of like faith; a faith for which I had been persecuted from the hour I embraced it. But I counted these things as nothing, for the sake of obeying God and having a resurrection with the just, and enjoy on earth the society of saints and prophets.

I cheerfully bid adieu to my enemies, and weeping friends stood round and viewed the parting scene. They had never beheld a saint leave his father, brothers, sisters, and those of the same faith. This was a new sight, and one they desired to see, if it had to take place. We started in good spirits to join the saints of God.—I had four yoke of oxen, six milch cows and calves, and a large number of other young cattle, and a hundred dollar mare I bought for my wife to ride and drive the cattle, as I had to be teamster.

We left our home, and pursued our journey to Maze's iron works, established at the Great Spring, which is the head of the Merri-mac river, where we arrived the evening of the third day, a distance of seventy-five miles. Here we camped for the night, and here for the first time heard of the trouble at Far West and Dismal. We here heard that the mob were preparing to drive the saints, and were advised to stop or turn back; which advice we refused to hearken to, telling them we only hoped to arrive there before the drive took place, and when it was over we would all live together, and that we were no better to be drove than the saints and prophets of God had been in all ages, and that I had much rather enjoy the drive or a dozen of them than to live in the society of those who were so corrupt as to drive men, women and children from their homes, and that for worshipping God as they thought proper; upon which the conversation ended for the night, and we retired to rest.

Rising early in the morning to look after my cattle, on going to where I had hitched my beast for the night, found her lying with her neck broke, by what means I knew not. We got breakfast, hitched up and started on our journey. My wife having to walk and drive the cattle, as the team was not gentle enough for her to drive, the people calling us damned fools for going to where we would be killed. I told them if there was not so many of their kind it would not be so; and whether their predictions proved true or false, we were going ahead, which we did, hearing every day various reports concerning the Mormons being drove, and their leaders killed. Some threatening us as if we did not turn back, but I gave them to understand they were not my commanders; that I knew I was right, and would go ahead as long as I had a leg to go on or an ox to draw me, and if I was wrong I knew they were not right; that their friendship was colder than hollow ice, and their profession meaner than the damnation of hell, and rather than live with them I would not live at all.

Such sparring with the inhabitants as we journeyed along were frequent occurrences. Some would not let us have wood off their land to make a fire to cook our victuals, and would not so much as let us have water from their wells, for which we suffered many times, it being hard to find in crossing the large prairies.

JOHN HENDERSON.

AN ACT

To Provide for the organization of certain townships in the county of Emmet.

SECTION 1. The Board of Supervisors of the County of Emmet enact, That all that part of the township of Little Traverse, in the county of Emmet, included in towns thirty-five and thirty-six north, of ranges five, six and seven west, shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Arbour Croche, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the school house, in the village of Arbour Croche, the first Tuesday in April next.

Sec. 2. That part of the county of Emmet known as towns thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five and thirty-six north, of range four west, shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Utopia, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of William De Mary, in said township, the first Tuesday in April next.

Passed by a majority of votes of all the members elected to the Board of Supervisors, upon due notice and application according to law, at an adjourned sitting of the annual meeting of the Board of Supervisors, this 22d day of October, 1855.

GALEN B. COLE,

Ch'n of the Board.

GEO. T. PRESTON, Co. Clerk.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, } ss.

County of Emmet, }

I, George T. Preston, Clerk of the county of Emmet, certify the foregoing to be a true copy of an original act on file in my office, and a true statement of the action of the Board of Supervisors of said county, on the several applications for the organization of the townships of Arbour Croche and Utopia.

[L. s.] Witness my hand and the seal of the Circuit Court of said county, at Charlevoix, in said county, the 22d day of October, 1855.

GEORGE T. PRESTON.

AN ACT

To Divide the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Emmet.

SECTION 1. The Board of Supervisors of the County of Emmet enact, That that part of the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Emmet, known as town thirty-three north, of range five west, and so much of town thirty-three north, of range six west, as lies to the north-eastward of the main channel of the Lake known as Green Lake, Long Lake, Pine Lake or Lake Mormon, shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Evangeline, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of Reuben T. Nichols, the first Tuesday in April next.

Sec. 2. That part of the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Emmet, contained in ranges six and seven west, which lies to the south-westward of the main channel of the Lake known as Green Lake, Long Lake, Pine Lake or Lake Mormon, shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Eveline, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of William Bickle, on the first Tuesday in April next.

Sec. 3. All that part of the township of Charlevoix known as range seven west, which lies northward of the main channel of the Lake known as Green Lake, Long Lake, Pine Lake or Lake Mormon, is hereby set off from the township of Charlevoix and annexed to the township of Little Traverse.

Sec. 4. The remaining part of the township of Charlevoix shall be and remain the township of Charlevoix.

Passed by a majority of votes of all the members elected to the Board of Supervisors, upon due notice and application according to law, at an adjourned sitting of the annual meeting of the Board of Supervisors, the 22d day of October, 1855.

GALEN B. COLE,

Ch'n of the Board.

GEO. T. PRESTON, Co. Clerk.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, } ss.

County of Emmet, }

I, George T. Preston, Clerk of the county of Emmet, certify the foregoing to be a true copy of an original act on file in my office, and a true statement of the action of the Board of Supervisors of said county, on the several applications for the division of the township of Charlevoix.

[L. s.] Witness my hand and the seal of the Circuit Court of said county, at Charlevoix, in said county, the 22d day of October, 1855.

GEORGE T. PRESTON.

YANKEE MODE OF TESTING COURAGE.

It is well known that in the time of the old French war much jealousy existed between the British and provincial officers.—A British Major deeming himself insulted by General (then Capt.) Putnam, sent a challenge. Putnam, instead of giving him a direct answer, requested the pleasure of a personal interview with the Major. He came to Putnam's tent, and found him seated on a small keg, quietly smoking his pipe, and demanded what communication, if any, Putnam had to make. "What you know," said Putnam, "I'm but a poor miserable Yankee, that never fired a pistol in my life, and you must perceive that if we fired with pistols you have undue advantage of me. Here are two powder kegs; I have bored a hole, and inserted a slow match in each; if you will be so good as to seat yourself there, I will light the matches, and he who dares to sit the longest without squirming, shall be called the bravest fellow." The tent was full of officers and men, who were heartily tickled with so strange a device of the "old wolf," and compelled the Major by their laughter and exhortation to squat. The signal was given, and the matches lighted; and Putnam continued smoking, quite indifferently, without watching at all the progressive diminution of the matches—but the British officer, though a brave fellow, could not help casting longing and lingering looks downwards, and his terrors increased as the length of the matches diminished. The spectators withdrew, one by one, to get out of the way of the expected explosion. At length the fire was within an inch of the keg, the Major unable to endure longer, jumped up, and drawing out his match, cried out, "Putnam, this is willful murder, draw out your match; I yield." "My dear fellow," cried Putnam, "don't be in such a hurry, they're nothing but kegs of onions!"

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 16.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, DEC. 6, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 83.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued with in the year or not.

Since our last issue there has been a general and simultaneous assault upon the Mormons of Beaver Island, by a considerable portion of the press of the State, similar to that of 1850, with a reasonable prospect that it may be followed by an array of government prosecutions, like that of 1851.

The thing is not pleasant, but still we say, let it come. We are better able to stand persecution now than we were then. And now, as then, the press have repeated every false and ridiculous tale, until the public have taken up the old proverb—"There can't be so much smoke, without some fire."

Then a long series of government prosecutions, conducted with relentless vigor, and resulting in the honorable acquittal of every one of the defendants, secured us a period of peace. Such a result we shall look for again with unshaken confidence. Therefore, we say, let it come.

During the past summer scarcely a week has gone by without a bitter attack on us by some paper. These attacks we have invariably re-published and answered. Had the press been willing that the public should hear our defence, they would have published our answers, or at least taken some notice of them. Because they have not done it, we can only believe they wish the public to condemn us unheard.

As far as we have been able to learn, the only paper which has so much as informed its readers that we made any defence whatever, is the Pontiac Gazette. Had all done as much, we are fully confident the public mind would have done us justice.

Among the various attacks made on us in this latter simultaneous assault, we have only received the following, which we insert at full length with a running comment:

Piracy on Lake Michigan.

Almost every mail brings us accounts of depredations along the coast of Lake Michigan. They are confined principally to the Northern portion of the Lake, but have, we believe, reached as far south as the Kalamazoo, and have been occasionally committed on the coast of the upper part of Lake Huron. So frequent and so extensive have been these robberies, that the people at many points on the Lake shore have become highly excited, so highly, indeed, that we should not be surprised to hear of serious conflicts and bloodshed.

At Mackinac and Grand Traverse, particularly, nothing but the cautious and constant absence of the suspected, will prevent severe and fatal chastisement. Stopping recently for a few days at Mackinac, we had ample opportunity to feel the public pulse, and we must say that we were really surprised at the deep and determined feeling which has taken hold of every person in that community. We met with several gentlemen from Grand Traverse and other places in that portion of the State, from whom we ascertained that the same spirit pervades the entire region of country.

But who are the depredators? Where is the piratical retreat? The citizen of Mackinac says "it is at Beaver Island." The resident of Grand Traverse also cries "Beaver Island," and the men of Detour and Cheboygan, with one voice approve the assertion.

We are told on all hands that the Mormons are the authors of all these robberies and crimes; and whether it is so or not, such is the firm belief of the entire "Gentile" population of that section of the State. And the evidence which they adduce does seem to show conclusively, that, whatever the character of the Mormons may be as a community, there are some among them who often forget that important clause in the Decalogue which says, "Thou shalt not steal."

That some persons have suffered severely at their hands, cannot be successfully denied. Among the sufferers we may mention a former esteemed citizen of Lansing, JOHN S. DIXON. We know Mr. Dixon well, as do many of our citizens; and it is not necessary to say to his acquaintances that if he and the Mormons have quarreled it is not his fault. He is emphatically a man of peace. A most conscientious and scrupulously upright person, he would never intrude upon any man's rights, nor wrongfully interfere with them in any manner whatever.

Last spring Mr. Dixon moved to Pine River, a point on Lake Michigan between Grand and Little Traverse bays, where he owns what is said to be the best water power in all that region of country. But he has not been permitted to enjoy that peace which is the birth-right of every American citizen. His property has been stolen, his family terrified, his life threatened, and himself and companions hung in effigy on his own premises, and all by men who are known as Mormons. Of this we have testimony which leaves us no room for doubt.

But it is not for us to say that all the outrages committed in that region are the works of Mormons; nor that all Mormons are knaves; nor that there are no peaceable and well disposed men residing on Beaver Island; but we do feel warranted in saying that serious aggressions upon the rights of others have been perpetrated by Mormons from Beaver Island, and that hitherto they have gone unpunished. They have wronged Mr. Dixon—seriously, grossly wronged him; and if there is any virtue, or justice, or honor, in the hearts of the Mormon rulers, or if they wish to remove the dark stigma which the public mind is fixing upon them; or if they would save their people from the fearful vengeance of an outraged and long-suffering community—let them at once see to it that restitution is made and justice done to him, and that all further aggressions are prevented or their authors promptly arrested and brought to condign punishment.

If the Mormon prophets, priests and elders do not approve these depredations, let them lend their aid in securing peace and safety to the "Gentiles," as well as the "Saints." The northern portion of the Peninsula is rapidly settling, and unless the unfortunate differences existing between the Mormons and the "gentile" population are soon amicably arranged, the most serious and deplorable consequences will unquestionably be the result. We counsel our friends to be cool, deliberate, forbearing. Punish wrong doers, but do it legally. Make no aggressions, but defend your homes and your property as is your right.—Lansing Republican.

The men of Mackinac who have been engaged in bitter hostility against the Mormons for six years, and have several times been engaged in bloody conflicts against them, now say the Mormons are thieves. Those at Cheboygan and Grand Traverse who migrated from Mackinac, with some of their neighbors, who take their words without further inquiry, say some of them will steal.

Why, gentlemen, so far as the ex parte statements of all these men of Mackinac can prove anything against the Mormons, it has been proved by clouds of witnesses for five years past that the Mormons of Beaver Island would not only steal along the shores; but that they were in the constant habit of pirating first class vessels and murdering the crews; had a regular mint in which they employed large numbers of men counterfeiting the coin; occupied a large two story building in a prominent position, and employed a press constantly, as well as several excellent engravers in counterfeiting notes; had an independent government supported by a well disciplined standing army, and a train of eighteen field pieces; ruled with such violence that numbers of persons were kept here in duress as bond slaves, to labor for king Strang and his nobles; and exercised so fearful a sway that first class passenger steamboats submitted to regular levies to avoid being pirated altogether.

Nor were the people of Mackinac unsupported in these assertions. They were pretty well backed up by the Advertiser and Tribune at Detroit, the Plaindealer at Cleveland, the Spectator and the Advocate at Green Bay, the Rough Notes at Buffalo, one of the papers at Grand Rapids, and one at Painesville, and we presume by five hundred other papers, which did not fall under our observation.

And this matter assumed a more serious aspect at that time than mere Mackinac grog room talk or newspaper scandal.—Some hundred indictments were found in the Federal and State Courts at Mackinac and Detroit; the military and naval force of the United States put in requisition, and ninety-nine men in a single summer taken from here, prejudged and foredoomed, and put on trial in the courts of their accusers, and every soul honorably acquitted.

Plenty of witnesses were then found to swear that the Mormons were guilty of all these crimes, but their testimony all crumbled away under cross-examination, precisely as it will again whenever the trial comes. We say let it come, and no matter how soon.

If there is any evidence that any Mormon has committed any one of the thefts of which they are accused, the proper place for a legal prosecution is in the county where the crime was committed. If committed upon the waters, the indictment may be in any county along the Lake. If they cannot convict the guilty in their own courts, their case must be bald indeed.

The Republican is greatly at fault in saying that "it is the firm belief of the entire Gentile population," &c. A very large portion of the Gentile population laugh at all these tales as heartily as we do.

And the Republican admonishes the Mormons "if they would save their people from the fearful vengeance" of their traducers to make restitution for various suppositious inquiries to Mr. Dixon, (of whom we have a word hereafter,) and to arrest and bring to condign punishment various imaginary aggressors.

We understand what is meant by mixing threat with accusation, and we tell Mr. Leech he is quite welcome to punish the aggressors, just precisely as he pleases, for aught we care.

For ourselves we do not deal in Lynch Law, and the beautiful Shanghai Legislature which sat in Lansing last winter having denied this portion of the State a Judiciary, we shall hold them responsible if the guilty go unpunished.

"The Mormon prophets, priests and elders do not approve" of deeds of lawless violence; and before the State Librarian lectures them on their duty to prosecute imaginary criminals, whose existence only floats in brains inflated with Indian whiskey, he would do well to inform them what court has jurisdiction of crimes committed at Pine River? If he can do that, he will be so far in advance of the Hon. Chairman of the Judiciary in the late House, and of the judge of the supreme court.

For this threat of revenge, we say, Mr. Leech, begin when you dare. Pshaw! One Mormon can drive twenty the best in in that gang, and we outnumber them three to one. Come just when you get ready, and you need not take pains to give us notice.

For the "dark stigma on our character," we have been just as evilly spoken of for twenty years by just such bigots as you are, and stand better in society now than we did then. Moreover, we have learned the saying, "blessed are ye when all men shall speak evil of you, and persecute you," &c.

It is true that the upper part of the lower peninsula is rapidly settling, and you may as well open your eyes to the fact that its population is Mormon, and it is a country from which you cannot expel them. They will satisfy you on that question whenever you wish to "try it on."

The article below we find in the Grand Rapids Herald, credited to the Livingston Courier, upon which the Herald remarks as follows:

On the first page of to-day's paper will be found a letter from a gentleman in Grand Traverse. His respectability is fully endorsed by the editor of the Livingston Courier, (a democratic sheet,) and from all we have heard from other sources we really are forced to believe that there is a body of men among the Mormons who are no better than thieves and desperadoes of the most dangerous description. If they are not countenanced by Strang, he should take active measures to have them brought to justice; if they are, the people of Michigan should take the matter in hand with a will.—Grand Rapids Herald.

The Mormons of Beaver Island.

The following letter addressed to a gentleman in this place, has been handed to us for publication. We know the author of it well, and know that whatever he states as facts may be relied upon. The numerous friends of Mr. Dixon and his amiable family, here and at Lansing at both of which places they have recently resided, will deeply regret to learn that they are called upon to endure so many difficulties and dangers; and all who know Mr. D. will readily come to the conclusion that he is not the aggressor. The facts communicated, it seems to us, call loudly upon both State and National governments to interfere for the defence and protection of the hardy settlers who have made their homes around Grand Traverse Bay. We hope the Press of the State will generally copy the letter.—Livingston Courier.

GRAND TRAVERSE, Mich., Sept. 10, '55.

FRIEND B—:

Two weeks since I attended our Circuit Court as Grand Juror, Judge Martin presiding, and Squire Eggleston of Grand Rapids prosecuting attorney. There was a trial of James E. Scott, a Mormon from Beaver Island living in Ionia county, for murder, the most horrible murder, of the daughter of his reputed wife, two and a half years old, by starvation, whipping while holding her up by the feet as the stripes made with a forked stick showed, and finally by breaking her skull with a poker. This dreadful deed was done gradually, day after day and night after night; and if the mother, who was tried as accessory and fully acquitted, had been tried first, Scott would have been convicted of murder instead of manslaughter, and sentenced to our Penitentiary for life instead of fifteen years; but the Traverse jury were not fully convinced of her innocence till her trial. One of the Run-sellers was made to disgorge $70 of his ill gotten gains, and two absentees stand indicted.

During our absence at Court, the house of Mr. Mitchell, the Indian farmer, was assailed at night by persons disguised as Indians; and one of them was shot by Mitchell's son, but he got off; several women were frightened by them, and Mrs. May slightly injured while defending her child which they tried to carry off. These acts of vandalism were not perpetrated by our Indians, for they are uniformly kind and behave well; beside the vandals spoke English which the Indians do not.

I really love these aborigines for their good conduct; and their gaw for yes reminds me strongly of my mother's gaw for signifying the same. It was supposed at the time, that these annoyances were perpetrated here to divert attention from the jail 30 miles off, in order to facilitate the rescue of Scott; but as he was kept chained in a steam saw mill, where a number of men work day and night, no rescue was attempted. One of the windows of the Court house under which the jail is, has been riddled with rifle balls by some person.

Last spring our friend John S. Dixon, lately of Howell, Michigan, moved to Pine River where he owns the best water power known here, his land extending on both sides of the river from Lake Michigan to Pine Lake. This region is claimed by the Mormon prophet Strang as the gift of Heaven to his saints, without the necessity of purchase from government, or even entering a pre-emption on it at the land office; and I am credibly informed that they possess the whole of Beaver and Fox Islands, except some small spots from which they ejected former occupants who had bought these spots, in the same way. At the time of friend Dixon's settlement, there were only three Mormon families living on Pine River; but soon after they hung Dixon, Dame and three others, whose names I do not now recollect, in effigy, and labelled the gallows with the words—"If the principals were here, they should share the same fate." Lately Mr. Sterling took a quantity of lumber to Pine River, preparatory to building; and cut down the gallows of Dixon's effigy. In the morning following, so much of the lumber as Dixon's boat could carry, was gone; and by following the shore of Pine Lake, Dixon and Sterling found the lumber, but the boat is still missing.

Nearly all of Dixon's property has been stolen; and lately Mrs. Dixon was driven from her home, in the night, to the nearest friendly settler at Bear River a distance of 10 or 12 miles, while he was absent. A letter was received here a few days since, requesting our Post Master to bring a company of trusty men with some flour and pork; but as he is absent, nothing has been done. Since spring 30 families of Mormons have flocked into the Pine River region; and it is very obvious that Dixon cannot stay there over winter, nor get away at any time without assistance; for when navigation closes he will be robbed of the necessities of life; and in the spring his family may be found under the snow, for there is no road, and he cannot come 40 miles to the settlement, even if his team had not been stolen. Why, it may be asked, did he not go away before his boat was stolen? Ans. His all is invested at Pine River, and in hopes of assistance from abroad he has tarried so long to save some of his property. He has written to government, both State and National; but has been told he must defend himself. The Mormons also have flattered him with the hope that his property would be restored if he would say he did not believe they had stolen it, while they continue stealing not only from him, but from every person who comes within their reach, fishermen's nets, every thing

All this is in accordance with what one Brown, who called himself a Mormon elder, preached to me at Utica, Mich., 25 years ago. According to his teaching they stand in precisely the same relation to the rest of mankind, as did the ancient Jews to the Canaanites; not only authorized, but positively commanded to rob all other people; and they confidently anticipate the time when they will be able to butcher all other people; and to prove this they refer to the old prophets for such passages as these: "The mountains shall be drenched in blood, and they shall ride through blood up to their horses' bridles, &c." Then possessed of all the wealth of nations, they will build a literal apocalyptic temple in the Rocky Mountains, and be the only people on the face of the earth. Hence they call themselves the " Latter Day Saints." The cogitations of their leaders, they consider to be so many revelations coming directly from Heaven; and all their beliefs are to be implicitly and literally obeyed; and they do obey them, as far as is in their power. If any one refuses, or neglects to obey, he is at once under suspicion and his faith is to be tried by all kinds of petty persecutions; and if he does not return to perfect obedience, these persecutions are increased until he is obliged to flee to a place of refuge beyond their control, for life is made a burden. All these facts may be learned by the attentive reader from Mormon books; and are attested by those who have lived among them; but are not preached publicly to the world at large in making converts from the mass of mankind. Their public preaching on the contrary, is all purity; and among their converts are frequently found some of the best of mankind, who have become tired of the turmoils and vices of civilization; and join the Mormon robbers in hopes of getting rid of the effects and influences of poverty, crime and all its consequences, and when, afterwards they learn the real condition into which they have been seduced, and refuse or neglect to obey the leaders, they are driven out with the loss of all earthly possessions, if indeed they are suffered to get away with life itself, which is not always the case.

There are now on this Peninsula some eight or ten Mormon refugees, who are among the best of our citizens; and evening after evening have I listened to their tales of horror practiced on Beaver Island. One, in the absence of her husband, escaped among the Indians on a neighboring island, who protected her against her saintly (!) Mormon pursuers, and supplied her with all the comforts of life through the winter. But these refugees are still in constant fear of Mormon vengeance, and hesitate to reveal the horrors they have witnessed indifferently, lest King Strang (as he claims to be) should send his assassins after them.

On this peninsula we consider ourselves safe; and, at the present rate of increase of our population, will soon be able to afford protection to other settlements in this northern region. At present every person struggles with all his strength, to get into a condition to maintain his family; and so long as the robbers do not attack us directly, we prefer not to provoke them, though we are by no means confident that they will not rob us, when least on our guard; for it is by robbing that they subsist, and without it some would perish on their fertile islands. But even now we are in the habit of considering offensive means; and no one need be surprised if blood should flow before they dream of it. All depends on the robbers refraining from molesting us. But what will become of our friend Dixon and his amiable family, God only knows! To think of the wrongs he is enduring, makes my blood boil, and a few days ago F——, and some others had shouldered their rifles to go to his assistance, but abandoned it till Millor returns, only for want of necessities.

The law is as impotent to bring these robbers to punishment as the new born infant to kill a Hyena; for all his clan are at the command of their leader (Strang whose every word is by them considered as a revelation, if he says so) to swear the offender clear. Hence he must be considered as the principal offender in all cases, and all his witnesses must be excluded. It is obvious that under such circumstances the law is a fool. But this same Strang, who has been the prime mover of many murders, sits annually as a member of our Legislature. What a mockery!

So wedded are the President and our Governor to ancient customs, that these banditti may strip Beaver Island and the public land at Pine River of all the timber they list, without any remonstrance; but if a faithful citizen of the U. S. takes too, there is a garrison strutting on the hill, far from any danger; but only 60 miles south one of the best of men is abandoned to his fate with his whole family, in constant dread of being murdered in cold blood, without a single soldier to guard him.

Some stress appears to be laid on the fact that the Courier is a Democratic sheet. Now it will be remembered that nearly all this portion of the State, both the Mormon and the Gentile sections, is Democratic, with remarkable unanimity.

Mackinac has for a long time been a kind of Democratic head quarters for the upper country, and has had the entire control of political appointments.

But since the vote of Emmet county has become more than four times that of Mackinac, the Democrats there very naturally claim a small share in these appointments.

In short, the Mormons got one appointment out of some twenty-five in 1853. In the effort to prevent their getting more, just such another outcry was raised as this present, and for a time it was successful. But this year they succeeded in ousting two more "men of Mackinac," and getting their places.

This fact has raised this new newspaper assault upon the Mormons, which will have answered its end if it saves to Mackinac the sweet satisfaction of quartering two or three of its hungry leeches upon salaried offices in the midst of the Mormons. In such a controversy a Democratic editor could take a part, by acting just as foolish as the other side generally have—that is, trying to drive out of the party those without whose votes they probably may lose the State. The Fusionists did actually succeed in defeating their candidate for Congress in the fourth district at the last election, by a persistent series of assaults upon the Mormons, when enough were disposed to vote for him to have secured his election. If a few men at Mackinac, a place ruined by the growing importance of Saint James, choose to quarrel with the Mormons, there are others in whom it is not wisdom to take up their quarrel.

The Livingston Courier is satisfied that in this controversy the Mormons are in the wrong, because of Dixon's character. Will the Courier pretend that Dixon left a better character behind when he went to Pine River than G. B. Cole, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Emmet county, or G. T. Preston, County Clerk, his two nearest neighbors? Disagreements of a serious nature frequently happen between neighbors of as good character as Mr. Dixon, and one side or the other must be in the fault.

THE GRAND TRAVERSE LETTER.

This letter is endorsed by the editor of the Courier as fully worthy of credit. Upon it we shall take issue.

The first point in it is the trial for murder of James E. Scott, "a Mormon from Beaver Island."

SCOTT'S CASE.

James E. Scott never lived on Beaver Island, and never visited the place. We never heard of him as a Mormon; nor at all, except as a prisoner for murder, of Grand Traverse. You can lay that lie on the counter with the rule, "false in one thing, false in all."

And we tell you, gentlemen, upon this issue we will rest our whole case. If it can be proved by one respectable witness, that Scott ever resided one day on Beaver Island, or was ever known to the church here as a Mormon, you may enter our cognovit for any amount of crimes.

ASSAULT ON MITCHELL'S HOUSE.

The story of the assault on the house of Mr. Mitchell is equally false. The fact in which it originated is merely this: Certain Young Americans at Grand Traverse went into Mr. Mitchell's garden to "steal watermelons," and some member of his family fired at them a gun loaded for the occasion, with some comparatively harmless ammunition. For the truth of this we refer to Mr. Mitchell himself, who gave the information to Mr. Wait, a reputable merchant of this place, well known at Detroit.

CHILD STEALING.

This story of child stealing first appeared in the Chicago Journal. It was then Mr. Ladd's child, and the object of the Mormons was to make him king at Beaver Island. So said the Grand Traverse correspondent of the Chicago Journal. The Journal also announced that "the people of Grand Traverse were greatly excited—intended to hold a meeting, and take the responsibility of driving the Mormons out." The Islander responded to them as it does now—"come as soon as you dare. We know very well that the dread of us is all that saves us from murder.—But we shall not eat or sleep the less for fear of you."

We have not slept the less; and now we laugh over the Courier, as we did then over the Journal, for being sold so cheap.

Again, upon the authority of Mr. Mitchell, the Indian farmer, we say that no such attempt was made. The whole matter resolves itself into a little sportiveness of two or three Indian women, who gave the mother and child a momentary fright, and laughed over their cowardice.

In the name of common sense, what could the Mormons want of Mr. Ladd or Mr. May's child? Cannot they, with the multitude of wives they have credit for, raise as many children as they want? And if as near starvation as this letter represents, and left to steal or die, would they incur so many perils to raise up the child of a stranger?

Waiving all these questions; if the Mormons have been so successful in crime as our accusers represent, are we fools as well as knaves? If we could wish to adopt the children of strangers, and be willing to toil, buy, borrow, beg and steal to support them, could not enough be had without stealing them? Don't the poor houses and hospitals of the large cities overflow with bright, healthy children, who they are anxious to get rid of? Are the Mormons fools to provoke the bitterest hostility of which man is capable, by stealing children? Bah! Don't the editor of the Courier feel a little ashamed of endorsing the truth of such a statement? Does not A. E. Gordon, of the Herald, think he sees Mr. Strang leaving his quiet family circle of happy mothers and prattling children, and going off eighty miles, across the water to steal a child? Don't he think the people of Michigan should take the matter in hand? Would not he like to come up here to put his hand in? Most cordially we invite him.

DIXON'S CASE.

Whether Dixon was or was not a respectable man, and a man of peace before he went to Pine River, we know nothing. But there is a slight episode of history which shows that his designs at that place were anything but friendly to the Mormons, and that however peaceable he had been before, he did not design to give them any peace.—The object avowed above board, defended, justified, approved, applauded, was to drive out the Mormons, who were there, and prevent others settling there.

A Mormon settlement had been projected at Pine River, and when at Lansing, 1853, Mr. Strang sent to the land office and obtained an office plat of the country, to guide him in selecting the lands necessary for the purpose.

While this plat was lying in his room, with the lands he had selected marked on it, A. S. Wadsworth, Esq., of Grand Traverse, called at the room in his absence, turned over his private papers, and hunted it out; and, guided by Mr. Strang's selections, went to the land office and entered the same lands for the benefit of himself and C. P. Bush, of Lansing. Before Wadsworth's return Mr Strang was offered one-third the purchase at five times the entire cost; an offer which he did not accept.

Whether Mr. Dixon was in any respect a party to this transaction, we are unable to say.—He at least bought with a full knowledge of it, and of the further fact that the Mormons had commenced their settlement, and concluded to get along without that land, and had prepared a landing, and cut a road further north.

This did not satisfy him.—He undertook to prevent the settlement of the Mormons on the main land at all. He spent last winter in Lansing traducing them, and endeavoring to get some legislation against them; and did get what was supposed to be sufficient to shield those who were to drive them out.—His plan failed, and his trouble now is not that the Mormons have driven him out, but that he failed to drive them out.

His purpose of expelling the Mormons was fully avowed when he went to Pine River with his family last spring, and he spoke of it to them as a simple matter of course, already settled by the action of the Legislature, and about which they ought not to complain.

Others talked the same things to the Indians to such an extent that they really believed the Mormons were violating the law and defying the government, by attempting to live on main land, and wondered at their temerity in thus defying so powerful a nation.

So far did Dixon carry this matter, that after some weeks residence and personal observation of the remarkable industry of Messrs. Cole and Preston, his nearest neighbors, he very kindly told them face to face that "as they appeared to be very honest and industrious, and it was somewhat difficult to get settlers in, he had concluded to let them stay, as he should wish to employ several laborers."

Considering that they had twenty times as much improvements as Dixon, and held their land on which they were living by legal right, this was rather cool.—Neither of them are collegiates, but either is as far ahead of Dixon as a business man as he is before the wild Indian. Much knowledge of man had he when he offered such men the dogs privilege of being alternately kicked and petted, because he wanted a few hewers of wood and drawers of water. Poor Dixon thought himself very liberal, and could not understand why they were so ungrateful.

At present the whole matter resolves itself into this: Dixon has paid next to nothing, and has nothing else to pay. The land proves worthless, and nobody else will buy. The only chance of the speculators is to take it back, and sell to the Mormons, who no longer want it. This hue and cry is made to induce the Mormons to buy that land, as the price of peace. This proffer has been made to them several times already.—But it will not succeed. We think we see the foot print of those speculators in this Courier article. It was an object to get it in a Democratic paper. And there were reasons why it should not originate in Lansing. Very well. Try it on, gentlemen. We shall not whimper if you don't.

WATER POWER AT PINE RIVER.

It is an old opinion that there is a valuable water power at Pine River. We were once of that opinion, and had some share in giving it currency. But it proves an error. The whole length of river is less than a half mile, and the current is so sluggish that boats sail up stream without difficulty. This short river is the outlet of Lake Mormon, sixteen miles long. This Lake is surrounded by the Mormon settlements, and the intercourse between this place and those settlements is carried on in sail-boats, without regarding the current of the river as an obstruction. As this fact is subject to continual observation, there can be no dispute about it.

STEALING DIXON'S PROPERTY.

We have no doubt considerable quantities of Dixon's property has been stolen, though the most valuable, and that most exposed to the Mormons, has not. The only question is as to who are the thieves. Those who are not blind past all cure will not be at a loss who to suspect, though they may have some difficulty in making proof. Thieves do not always call witnesses of their deeds, and yet circumstances may point them out.

Dixon himself says, (and we assert it, depending on him to confirm it if it is disputed elsewhere, for we have no other proof,) that when he brought his cow into the country, at Mackinac she was stolen from him and got away through the most public street of the place, and that he searched for her in vain; till, after much delay and annoyance, an Irishman drove her back to him, and apologized by saying, "they thought he was a damned Mormon."

We have chose this fact among many because Dixon is our witness, to show that at Mackinac stealing from the Mormons requires no secrecy. With these men of Mackinac the stealing of some of Dixon's property was a desideratum. If the Mormons would not steal from Dixon, somebody else must do it, and lay it to them.

He had oxen and a cow running with the cattle of the Mormons, far away in the depths of the forests, fat enough for slaughter, which they could steal and consume and leave no mark behind. These remained safe.

But a wagon, a boat and some kettles, which they could never use without the most imminent danger of detection, were stolen. Those who can believe Mormons stole them may, we have not another word to say on the subject.

STIRLING'S LUMBER.

We do not doubt that Stirling's lumber was stolen, but again insist that he has looked the wrong way for the thieves.

Dixon and Stirling, accompanied by a number of Indians, did go up Lake Mormon in search of the stolen lumber, and at the house of William Bickle found what they claimed as his lumber, and took part of it away. But they both admitted that they were not certain as to the identity of it, and so well satisfied were the Indians that Bickle owned the lumber that they refused to assist in removing it.

Another fact indicative of the real truth is, that as these men were strangers to each other, Bickle unhesitatingly gave Stirling his name, saying, he was ready to answer at law, and Stirling and Dixon both refused to give Stirling's name.

Bickle immediately prosecuted the trespassers, and while the prosecution was pending several pieces of Stirling's lumber came ashore on the beach of Lake Michigan, in a south-west wind. This fact rendered so conclusive that his lumber had started for Grand Traverse, that they did not longer hesitate to pay Bickle his costs and damages.

No one now doubts that some one going from Mackinac to Grand Traverse loaded Stirling's lumber in Dixon's boat, (which had no sail,) and took it in tow, and either purposely or by accident cast it off while on the way. Most likely the boat was scuttled; but, at any rate, the lumber came back, in vindication of God's eternal justice, to bear witness in court, and give the lie to this false accusation of the Mormons.

There is another chain of evidence that the lumber which Stirling and Dixon took from Bickle was honestly his. The lumber was sawed at the steam mill of James Smith & Co., of this place, and the slabs and part of the boards out of the same stocks are here, with the color, knots and grain, matching precisely, to identify the lumber.—There, gentlemen, is evidence you cannot cross-examine.

On this point we think it is not necessary to say more. But it is a matter of satisfaction to us that Mr. Bickle, having spent last winter in the counties of Livingston, Shiawassee and Washtenaw, is quite as unlikely to there be believed guilty of stealing lumber, as Dixon is of disagreeing with honest men. So far as personal character goes, we will trust Bickle against Dixon.

ALARMS.

We never heard before of Mrs. Dixon's being frightened, and going to Bear Creek, and presume she never did. If she really did go there in a fright, she ran from her shadow, like many other silly women, including some male women. Mrs. Dixon will not deny that she has slept there one hundred and fifty nights, when the Mormons could easily have murdered every soul in the house and no living being to accuse the murderers, and that she is yet unharmed.

DIXON'S TEAM.

We are a little amused at the assertion that Dixon's team has been stolen, which we overlooked and failed to notice in its proper place.

Dixon sold his team to the Rev. A. J. Porter, Presbyterian Missionary at Bear Creek, Indian Village, Little Traverse.—If any one will not take our assertion for this, we refer him to the Rev. Missionary himself, who we doubt not will be very free to answer any reasonable inquiry.

THE GALLOWS.

The Mormons did erect a gallows at Pine River, but instead of Dixon, &c., the men hung in effigy were old offenders, refugees from justice, who, indicted for their crimes in this region, have gone to seek sympathy in other places, as victims of Mormon atrocities.

And Stirling did not cut that gallows down. It stands now, where it is likely to stand for fifty years to come, and where the rough stones piled around it are the enduring monument of the deed of blood and murder there committed, the 13th June, 1851, by the same men who are now the sole witnesses of the Mormon piracies along the shores, and on whose word it is now sought to embroil State and National Government in a war of extermination against industrious men and good citizens, whose only real offence is being Mormons.

TIMBER.

The old cry is raised, as though the Mormons were stripping valuable timber off the public land. We undertake to say, and we challenge personal examination to test the truth of the assertion, that a single cargo of marketable pine lumber cannot be made of all the timber within ten miles of Pine River.

And following round the entire coast of Lake Mormon, some sixty miles, and so four miles inland, and you cannot get another cargo. The people of Grand Traverse average to steal weekly more pine timber than all there is in Emmet county, within twenty miles of Pine River.

The Mormons are clearing land for farms, and purchase from Saint Clair and Grand Traverse more than half the lumber they use.

MORMON REFUGEES.

The correspondent of the Courier awards high praise to the Mormon refugees at Grand Traverse. Of the most of them, all we have to say is, that they are the same men who served their country as witnesses in the celebrated mail robbery case at Detroit in 1851. The jurors in that case, men of distinguished standing, from every part of the State, will know what estimate to put on what they may say.

When the Courier's correspondent has listened to their last tale, we will lend him "Don Quixotte," or the "Arabian Knight's Entertainment."

Among them, however, is one man whose reproach fell upon us. Royal Tucker was once a Mormon, and by the Mormons was sent into Kent county to preach. On leaving there he stole a horse, from Roswell Merrill, a few miles from Grand Rapids, which he took into Illinois and sold, in the neighborhood of Saint Charles.

The matter was investigated by another Mormon elder, we believe Mr. Hickey, and on the coming in of his report Tucker was excommunicated. As he never returned here, we could not prosecute him. But our attempt to have him prosecuted in the proper place, procured for him abundance of sympathy. He is now a fit man to tell tales of Mormon crimes.

CRIMINAL INTENTIONS.

From the beginning of the disagreement here, those opposed to the Mormons have not ceased to threaten lawless violence against the Mormons.—As early as 1851 the newspapers took up the threat, and now a dozen papers reiterate it.

In the same period the Mormons have never threatened it. The utmost they have proposed was defence, never retaliation. In the numerous legal investigations which the controversy has elicited, the result has always proved them on the side of the law, and their accusers engaged in lawlessness. So it will be to the end of the chapter.

The Detroit Advertiser contains a letter of one Lemorandiere, accusing the Mormons of Beaver Island of stealing from him at Detour. Now we have the most ample evidence that this is not Lemorandiere's accusation, but J. A. T. Wendell's.

When Lemorandiere came to Mackinac he addressed Wendell in French, relating his injury.—Wendell told him it must be the work of the Mormons of Drummond Isle. Lemorandiere replied that he would not suspect them. He had had some of them in his employ, and knew them all well, and no one need tell him that they would steal.

Then it must be the Beaver Island Mormons. Lemorandiere was incredulous. So the next day Wendell picked up or fabricated the report that the Che-neau (Shanouse) Indians had seen a small vessel (which by the description must be the Dolphin of Beaver Island,) hovering around that vicinity at the very time the robbery was committed.

This seemed to make a case, and Lemorandiere gave his name to the public as accuser of the Mormons.

We answer, the Dolphin was ashore and dismantled at this place several weeks before that robbery was committed.

Finally, to sum up, we say that since the 18th of May last, but one Mormon from here has been on or along the east shore of Lake Michigan, south of Emmet county line, or in Grand Traverse Bay. Upon this assertion we defy the world to contradict us.

When robbery and arson succeeded each other almost nightly there, and nobody knew who were the guilty, the Grand River Times and the Allegan Record were down on the Mormons with relentless bitterness. But finally the robbers were caught in the very act, and pursued into St. Joseph's River, where, after a splendid specimen of tall walking, they were lost sight of in the depths of forests and swamps.

Did a newspaper then speak out and exonerate the Mormons from groundless suspicions? Not one. When such a wretch as Dave Moon, clothed with crime as with a garment, charges his own offences to the Mormons, papers spring up like barking dogs to echo his words as those of an oracle.

But when the thieves were actually pursued two hundred miles, and some hundred dollars of booty recovered, and by that fact the Mormons exonerated from suspicion, they are as silent as the house of death. That will not make a readable article for a newspaper.

We have ceased to take to ourselves any trouble about these matters. We have known for years what the editors seem so anxious to impress upon us, that when the public vengeance is waked up the law will not protect us, and that among an angry people innocence is no shield.

We do not expect Governor or President to protect us against mobs. We live in the continual assurance that any one of us might be murdered in a neighboring county and not a magistrate could be induced to issue process against the murderer.

Yet we walk in conscious security. We laugh in bitter scorn at all these threats. And we tell these editors, marshal your myrmidons and send them along to make a spoil of beauty and booty, as soon as you please. We bid them a bloody welcome to hospitable graves; over which, each year we will pile stones, with a muttered curse, against the day of the resurrection of damnation.

NEW NUNNERY.

The steamer Queen City, on her last trip down, brought thirteen nuns of the order of Saint Francis, to establish a nunnery at Little Traverse.

Accompanying them were several priests and students, about opening a new Catholic College at the same place. Their location is very near the extensive Mormon settlements about Pine River and Lake Mormon.

Every soul are Germans, and scarcely one can speak a word of English. This is the fruit of last winter's Know-Nothing legislation, designed to keep the Mormons out of there. But we confess ourselves rather pleased than otherwise.

DAGUERREA.

We have examined specimens of Daguerreotypes taken by Bro. A., at the Saint James Daguerrean Gallery, and feel fully justified in stating that they are equal to any in the western States, and inferior to none. Whether the Artist is more skillful, his chemicals more scientifically compounded, his apparatus superior, or his sitters better looking, we know not; but this we do know, that they are truthful, in fact they look as though they wanted to speak, but could not.

The following letter comes to us in an unknown hand, but having every appearance of being genuine, and having the writer's name signed at length, we let it speak for itself.

Mr. Westbrook called here last summer as he was going east on the steamer Michigan, and gave us a laughable relation of the story getting afloat that he was selling out to King Strang, and of the rising of some of the riff-raff to destroy his property and do violence to him for daring to sell to a Mormon.

Pottawatomie (Washington.) Island, November 30, 1855.

EDITOR OF THE NORTHERN ISLANDER:

DEAR SIR—Our Island was thrown in great confusion November 24th, 1854. John Laf-lumbay, a half breed, was struck by a Mormon with a bowie knife, but the villain missing his blow struck his chin. All the north-west part of the Island was under arms, commanded by Wm. Shirreff, a Justice of the Peace, who came to West Harbor and stated to Mr. Westbrook that the Mormons were hovering round the Island; that their boats were in some harbor on the shore, and that four or five were sent as spies to kill Joseph Lobdale.

Savage, Jess Hull and Burt Williams were questioned by Mr. Westbrook how they knew that their intention was to kill Lobdale, or that they were spies, and who saw them. They said an Indian saw them: that he did not see but one, for the rest did not come near the place; that the Mormons were hard up for grub, and they must rob for their winter's supplies; that they were a d—d thievish set; they knew them well; they would not work; that they had lived on Beaver Island, and suffered by their thefts. So you can do as you please, but it will be too late when they burn your houses and rob you. Well, certainly it will be very late when men come from Beaver Island and burn my little house.

In April, 1855, a small robbery was committed at West Harbor, to wit, six gallons of whiskey, which belonged to Burt Williams, taken out of Mr. Westbrook's store house, and carried to J. M. Crow's, by some of them Beaver Island or Pine River scamps. A. W. Denton, of North Bay, in the latter part of July or August, 1855, was actually robbed by the Mormons. Proof: Joseph Lobdale, Esq., master of the good ship Sea Lark, was at North Bay, saw the boat that done the robbery, knew the boat, but never thought where he had seen it till eight days after the robbery, then recollected that it was a Mormon boat; knew the men that owned it, and offered twenty-five dollars bounty for men to go to Beaver Island to whip out the Mormons. No one seemed willing to go, as they were not sure how the Mormons would act if they got vexed.

The boat was the same that brought King Strang to West Harbor to make the trade with Mr. Westbrook for that place. James Strang, Esq., forfeited the four hundred dollars, by not fulfilling his contract. The story was so well told as to gain credit far enough to make two of the honest Pine River gents sell out and decamp. Also Mr. Westbrook was not easy, as everything he owned was threatened with fire if he dare give a Mormon one night's lodging. The threats were so daring that a strict watch was kept for several nights, with orders to let them burn one house, then to give them a sure mark of kindness with buck shot. One poor fellow by the name of John Papineau I was sorry for, who was in the Pine River fight.—He sold out all his effects and lost the whole.

I am now going to close my account by saying I do not wish to take part with the Mormons, as I am not acquainted with them. But according to the way I read the words of our Lord they are the only people deserving the name of Christians. All manner and kind of sects speak evil of them, revile and persecute them, even to death. If that is not the true mark, what is? One thing I say boldly, if the Mormons are worse than the gents that run from there, that is to say, Shirreff, Lobdale, Rose, Papineau, Hull, Moon, Williams, Baker, Gilda and Savage, they are to be pitied. So I say. Amen.

J. E. WELLS.

P. S. The half is not told. I would like to describe their different tales on the Pine River scamps.

J. E. W.

SAINT JAMES

DAGUERREAN GALLERY,

WATER STREET, ONE DOOR SOUTH OF THE "NORTHERN ISLANDER" OFFICE.
Likenesses taken in any weather, and warranted to give satisfaction.
Ladies and gentlemen will be called and examine specimens.
Saint James, Dec. 8, 1855.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Galilee, Oct. 22, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER:—In my former letter I closed my narrative by giving an account of the threats and menaces of the people on the road to Far West. I was not in the least discouraged by the reports of persecution, but continued towards my place of destination.

Every day or two we heard fresh news from the saints in Caldwell county. We suffered many cold rain storms, had several large streams to cross, which were rather dangerous crossing, as there were no ferry boats. We crossed the Gasconade river by swimming our oxen, with our wagons. We ferried the Osage river by putting our wagon on two old canoes, swimming all our oxen and other cattle; Hewitt having to swim to drive them. We crossed this river thirty miles from Jefferson city.

We kept up the south-side of the Missouri river to Lexington, and there crossed it. This was called the Richmond landing, though several miles from that place. Before arriving here we had many streams of considerable size to cross, the names of which I have forgotten. We crossed Salt river fourteen miles from the Missouri, and passed through Boone and Lafayette counties. Lexington is a little town on the banks of the Missouri river, in Lafayette county.

At this place we first heard the sound of the drum, beating for volunteers to join the mob to go against and plunder, rob and drive the Mormons. Here they refused to ferry us across the river, and finally agreed to do it only on one condition, and that was, we should wait until within half an hour of sundown, and put all our oxen, wagons, loose cattle, wives, children and everything we had aboard at once. The ferry boat was one of those old fashioned logsided, slab-bottom boats, which looked just like it had been made to drown men.

But, had as it was, it was cross in it on their time or not at all, and no assurance that we would ever reach the other side if we undertook it. We verily believed they had plotted to drown us all together, nevertheless concluded to cross or go to the bottom, trusting in God for protection from a watery grave. At the time appointed we put everything we had aboard, and started for the other shore, the boat dipping water every wave, and the ferryman damning the cattle, swearing he wished the boat would sink. But we all landed safe on the other side, and paid just five dollars for the ride, and camped on the bank for the night.

Hewitt and myself stood guard all night, watching to keep them from taking our cattle. In the morning one of the mob wanted to take my gun, and try if it shot well. I told him I could show him how it shot; that I would shoot at a hog that was standing on the other side of the river, and if I killed it he should pay for it, and I take it. I laid down in the boat and shot at the hog. The bullet crossed the river, but did not hit the hog.

He said the river was over a mile wide at this place, and he wanted that gun to shoot Mormons with. I told him I thought it would do as much execution in my hands and me to pull the trigger as it would in his. When I said this he said he believed I was a Mormon, I told him I supposed he did, and that was why he wanted to get my gun; but I had seen just such characters as him him before. I told him I supposed the man that owned the ferry was of the same opinion, and that was the reason he attempted to drown us the night before.

He then turned from me and walked to where the women were getting breakfast, and asked if he could get something to eat. They told him travelers did not keep tavern. He then asked them if they were damned Mormons.—They told him they were not damned Mormons. At this time I came up to the fire, and invited him to leave there; which he did, with many curses on the Mormons, and how they intended to slay them in less than a week's time.—This day we traveled in considerable danger, having to travel through their camps along the road different times in the course of the day, and camped at night within a mile of one of their camps.

Next morning we started very early, for we intended to reach the end of our journey that day. We had ascertained that the mob intended to march to Dismal the next day, which would be Sunday, and surprise the saints at meeting. But the saints were on their guard, and knew their plans. This day we got to Benjamin L. Clapp's, four miles from the town of Far West. Here we were greeted with joy and gladness, and glad we were that we had got to our stopping place, and that among the saints of God.

The next day we attended meeting, John Taylor, one of the twelve Apostles, preached. While he was preaching two hundred of the mob rode up to the door of the meeting house on their way to Dismal, and said they were ordered to disperse the mob that was there. But in this they lied, for they marched to that place and joined the mob. They had not been called out by the Governor, but subsequently joined his mob when they came on, under General Clark.

Six thousand men were called out against the saints, by order of Lillburn W. Boggs, Governor of the State of Missouri, the most of whom were possessed of a mob spirit, willing to murder and drive the saints without mercy and without cause. He arrived two days in advance of General Lucas, who was in command of four thousand men, of the same stamp. The day that General Clark arrived in Far West, Colonel Hinkle, who was in command of a part of the Mormon force, was sent to reconnoiter and watch the movements of the enemy.

While on this scout he fell in with a part of Clark's command, and entered into arrangements with them to surrender the town of Far West to them. This was to be done by Hinkle marching with all speed into town, and appear on the north of the public square with a white handkerchief tied on his hat. Clark was to proceed on the road leading from Richmond to Far West, coming in on the south. The white handkerchief was the signal for them to butcher the inhabitants, and burn the town.

But the God of heaven seemed to have an eye on their movements. For in an open prairie, well known by him, and only six or seven miles from town, Hinkle got lost, and did not arrive until an hour after the arrival of General Clark's company. They arrived late in the afternoon, and made no halt until within sixty or seventy rods of the public square, and not until one hundred and thirteen of the saints, under the command of Captains McRay and Killion, formed the line of battle immediately between them and the main part of the town, determined to dispute their entrance.

They, seeing our determination, and not seeing the ensign as promised by Hinkle, and not knowing but he had deceived them, retreated across Goose Creek, a distance of half a mile from town, and went into camp without giving any information of their design; and as Hinkle had not yet arrived, and we were not aware of his treachery, nor the cause of his stay, and not knowing the design of the enemy, we immediately prepared for an attack from them, provided they should so determine.

We threw up a kind of breast-work of house logs, rails, slabs and anything we could get, not that it would screen us from their bullets, but as a kind of barrier in case of a charge, expecting an attack in the night. Every man was at his post that night, with his arms in hand, and a number of the women were in the ranks.

Hinkle and company did not arrive until about dark, and it was not until the third day after the arrival of the enemy that we were fully assured of his treachery.—The morning of the arrival of Gen. Clark occurred one of those deeds of horror, which are supposed to characterize war only among the most barbarous people.

Near where I was stationed on guard, but on the opposite bank of a small stream, lived an old gentleman of most estimable character, his wife and two daughters, amiable, intelligent, comely and of irreproachable characters. They had not been long among the Mormons, and had always, both before and since embracing the faith, moved in the upper ranks of society, and had done nothing to make themselves specially obnoxious to the mob more than other Mormons.

The wife was sick, and could not safely be removed from the house, and for that reason alone were left in a situation which made these two young ladies peculiarly the victims of civil war. Trusting to their irreproachable standing in southern society, and to the fact that no one of the family took any part in the hostilities, even in defence of their home, the husband and daughters remained to care for the sick wife and mother, when Gen. Clark stationed his forces in the immediate vicinity of the house.

Scarcely were they camped around, when thirty-two of Gen. Clark's men seized these two young ladies, stripped them naked, and bound them down on benches, when they violated their persons in succession, until each had been violated by sixteen men.

This deed was done in the presence of Gen. Clark, and was the subject of the jeers and rude laughter of his men; known in all the camp while it was being done. A large proportion of the men, including Gen. Clark, were professors of religion, yet I heard no voice of remonstrance; saw no look of shame among them.

For myself, I was on duty upon the opposite side of the ravine which divided the two armies, and a large body of Gen. Clark's army occupied the slope of the hill between. I could do nothing; but the voice of vengeance then breathed vibrates yet, as oft as I wake from sleep or look on a persecutor. I pray God that if I ever forget the vow there made he may forget me in the moment of my greatest need. I do not believe that christian charity requires me to forgive the impetuous such deeds.

The parents were compelled to witness this bitter humiliation of their daughters. The young ladies scarcely survived alive, and felt their degradation so deep that they fled to a distant home among strangers, where their cruel misfortune was unheard of, that they might console each other through the miserable days that remained, with none to talk of the cause of that sorrow for which earth had no Letha.

In compassion to them those who have written of that persecution have forborne any special notice of their sufferings, and for the same reason I withhold the mention of their names.

This same day one of their company struck a young man (a Mormon) on the head with the butt of his gun, who they had taken prisoner. The stroke burst his head, scattering his brain; for no other cause than speaking while a prisoner. When he died they released some other prisoners to bring him into town. Father Clapp, a man upwards of eighty years old, was one of the number.

The next morning John E. Page and myself, assisted by some others, buried him in the presence of his murderers. He was murdered in cold blood. These transactions proved my declaration to be true, that their friendship was colder than polar ice, and their profession meaner than the damnation of hell. If they do not, I shall not try to prove it.

JOHN HENDERSO

DEATH OF JOSEPH SMITH.

From Derby and Miller's History of Mormons.

Illinois, like Missouri, divided itself into two great camps, the Mormons and the anti-Mormons, and the circumstances were so menacing that Mr. Ford, the Governor, took the field in person. In a proclamation to the people of Illinois, he stated that he had discovered that nothing but the utter destruction of the city of Nauvoo would satisfy the militia and troops under his command, and that if he marched into the city pretensions would not be wanting on their part for the commencement of slaughter. Anxious to spare the effusion of blood, he called upon the two Smiths to surrender peaceably, pledging his word and the honor of the State, that they should be protected.

The Mormons agreed to the terms, and Joseph and his brother surrendered to take their trial.—The "Prophet" had a presentiment of evil, and said, as he surrendered, "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter, but I am calm as a summer's morning; I have a conscience void of offence, and shall die innocent." While in prison at Carthage, another writ was served upon him and Hyrum for high treason against the State of Illinois, on an information in which the principal witness was the Higbee already mentioned, and whose hostility to Joseph had not ended at the trial before the court of Nauvoo.

As the mob breathed vengeance against both prisoners, and as the militia very indecently sided with the people, and were not to be depended on in case of any violence being offered to the two Smiths, the Governor was requested by the citizens of Nauvoo and other Mormons to set a guard over the gaol. On the morning of the 26th of June, 1844, the Governor visited the prisoners, and pledged his word to protect them against the threatened violence.

It now began to be rumored among the mob that there would be no case against the Smiths on either of the charges brought against them. A band of ruffians accordingly resolved that as "law could not reach them; powder and shot should." About six o'clock in the evening of the 27th, the small guard stationed at the gaol was overpowered by a band of nearly two hundred men, with blackened faces, who rushed into the prison where the unfortunate men were confined. They were at the time in consultation with two of their friends. The mob fired upon the whole four. Hyrum was shot first, and fell immediately, exclaiming, "I am a dead man." Joseph endeavored to leap from the window, and was shot in the attempt, exclaiming, "O Lord, my God." * * * They were both shot after they were dead, each receiving four balls. John Taylor, one of the two Mormons in the room, was seriously wounded, but afterwards recovered.

An eye-witness of the murder, named Daniels, who was connected with neither the Mormons nor the mob, gave some additional particulars of the outrage in a small work published by himself, in the State of Illinois, in 1844.—Daniels, it seems, was overtaken on the prairies on the afternoon of the murder by a band of settlers, all more or less disguised with blackened faces, &c., who communicated to him the object of their gathering, which was to force the gaol at Carthage, and to assassinate Smith and his fellow-prisoners.

They appealed to him to join the expedition; and on his refusal, compelled him by threats to accompany them to the scene, that he might not, by giving an alarm, betray their object to the authorities. His impression was that when Smith fell from the window he was not dead, but merely stunned by the fall, and he states that one of the gang raised him up and placed him against a wall, and that, while in this position, four others among the mob advanced to the front rank with loaded muskets, and fired at the "Prophet." From the circumstance that four bullets were afterwards found in his body, there would appear to be some ground for believing this to be the correct account of Smith's death, as each of these four men stood at so short a distance from him as to make it quite certain that every shot fired took effect.

* * * Joseph Smith was indeed a remarkable man; and, in summing up his character, it is extremely difficult to decide whether he were indeed the vulgar impostor which it has become the fashion to consider him, or whether he were a sincere fanatic, who believed what he taught.

But whether an impostor, who, for the purpose of his ambition, concocted the fraud of the Book of Mormon, or a fanatic who believed and promulgated a fraud originally concocted by some other person, it must be admitted that he displayed no little zeal and courage; that his tact was great, that his talents for governing men were of no mean order, and that, however glaring his delusions in early life may have been, he manifested as he grew older, an ability both as an orator and a writer which showed that he possessed strong natural gifts, only requiring cultivation to have raised him to a high reputation among better educated men. There are many incidents in his life which favor the supposition that he was guilty of a deliberate fraud in pretending to have revelations from heaven, and in palming off upon the world his new Bible; but, at the same time, there is much in his later career which seems to prove that he really believed what he asserted—that he imagined himself to be in reality what he pretended—the chosen medium to convey a new gospel to the world—the inspired of heaven, the dreamer of divine dreams, and the companion of angels. If he were an impostor, deliberately and coolly inventing, and pertinaciously propagating a falsehood, there is much to be said, that never was an impostor more cruelly punished than he was, from the first moment of his appearance as a prophet to the last.

Joseph Smith, in consequence of his pretensions to be a seer and prophet of God, lived a life of continual misery and persecution.—He endured every kind of hardship, contumely and suffering. He was derided, assaulted and imprisoned. His life was one long scene of peril and distress, scarcely brightened by the brief beam of comparative repose which he enjoyed in his own city of Nauvoo. In the contempt showered upon his head his whole family shared. Father and mother, and brothers, wife and friends were alike involved in the ignominy of his pretensions, and the sufferings that resulted. He lived for fourteen years amid vindictive enemies, who never missed an opportunity to vilify, to harass and to destroy him; and he died at last an untimely and miserable death, involving in his fate a brother to whom he was tenderly attached.

If anything can tend to encourage the supposition that Joseph Smith was a sincere enthusiast, maddened with religious frenzies, as many have been before and will be after him—and that he had strong and invincible faith in his own high pretensions and divine mission, it is the probability that unless supported by such feelings, he would have renounced the unprofitable and ungrateful task, and sought refuge from persecution and misery in private life and honorable industry. But whether knave or lunatic, whether a liar or a true man, it cannot be denied that he was one of the most extraordinary persons of his time, a man of rude genius, who accomplished a much greater work than he knew; and whose name, whatever he may have been whilst living, will take its place among the notabilities of the world.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. VI.—NO. 1.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JAN. 24, 1856.

WHOLE NO. 84.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

HOME MANNERS.

We sometimes meet with men who seem to think that any indulgence in an affectionate feeling is a weakness. They will return from a journey, and greet their family with a distant dignity, and move among their children with the cold and lofty splendor of an iceberg, surrounded by its fragments. There is hardly a more unnatural sight on earth than one of these families without a heart. A father had better extinguish a boy's eyes than take away his heart. Who that has experienced the joys of friendship, and values sympathy and affection, would not rather lose all that is beautiful in nature's scenery, than to be robbed of the hidden treasure of his heart? Cherish, then, your heart's best affections.—Indulge in the warm and gushing emotions of filial, parental and fraternal love. Love God, everybody, everything that is lovely. Teach your children to love; to love the rose, the robin; to love their parents; to love their God. Let it be studied objects of their domestic culture, to give them warm hearts, ardent affections. Bind your family together by those strong cords. You cannot make them too strong. Religion is love; love to God, to man.

I WAS ONCE YOUNG.

It is an excellent thing for all who are engaged in giving instruction to the young people, frequently to call to mind what they were themselves when young. This practice is one of the most likely to impart patience and forbearance, and to correct unreasonable expectations. At one period of my life, when instructing two or three young people to write, I found them, as I thought, unusually stupid.

I happened about this time to look over the contents of an old copy-book, written by me when I was a boy. The thick up-strokes, the crooked down-strokes, the awkward joining of the letters, and the blots in the book, made me completely ashamed of myself, and I could, at that moment, have burned the book in the fire. The worse, however, I thought of myself, the better I thought of my backward scholars; I was cured of my unreasonable expectations, and became in future doubly patient and forbearing. In teaching youth, remember that you once were young, and in reprovin their youthful errors, endeavor to call to mind your own.

Law is like a country dance, people are led up and down in it till they are tired out. Law is like a book of surgery—there are a great many terrible cases in it. It is like phsyio too, they that take the least of it are the best off. It is like a homely gentleman, "very well to follow," and a scolding wife, very bad when it follows us. Law is like a new fashion, people are bewitched to get into it; "and like bad weather," most people are glad to get out of it.

THE DECALOGUE.

1. These Commandments were given by the voice of God, in Mount Sinai, to Moses, and to all Israel; (Deut. ix, 10;) for though Moses and the Elders of Israel only went into the Mount, (Ex. xxiv, 1, 2, 9—11,) and Moses alone received the Tables of the Law; yet all Israel heard the voice of God, when he gave the Commandments. (Ex. xix, 16—19, xx, 22, Deut. v, 4, 5; Josephus' Ant. B. iii, ch. v, 4.)

2. The Commandments were written on two tables of stone, by the finger of God. (Deut. ix, 10, 11.) Moses broke these tables; after which he prepared two others, on which God wrote the same words. (Deut. x, 2, 4, 5,) and the tables were placed in the Ark of the Covenant, (Josephus' Ant. B. iii, ch. iv, 1, Heb. ix, 4,) and kept within the Tabernacle and the Temple until the Babylonish captivity. (2d Mac. ii, 4, 5.)

3. They were not restored to the Esdraic Temple, (Buck's Th. Dic. "Ark," But. Con. "Temple," and the Jews have not possessed them since going into Babylon.)

4. It was never allowable to write the exact words of the tables, (Josephus' Ant. B. iii, ch. v, 4,) except in the Exemplar of the Law, kept in the Sanctuary. But the substance of them, as written out by the Prophets for public use, is now restored by divine authority.

I.

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy might, and with all thy strength; thou shalt adore him, and serve him, and obey him: thou shalt have no other gods before thee: thou shalt not make unto thee any image or likeness of anything that is in the heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters of the earth, to bow thyself unto it, or to worship it: thou shalt not bow down thyself unto, nor adore anything that thine eye beholdeth, or thy imagination conceive; but the Lord thy God only; for the Lord thy God is a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, from generation to generation, even upon all that hate him, and showing a multitude of mercies unto them that keep his commandments.

1. The design of the Almighty evidently is to found his government in love; and to make that the chief sanction of his law. Love is the first thing required of all men; love unto God, who first loved us, and who bestows on us all the good which we possess.

2. The adoration service and obedience, which he demands of us, are but the natural sequence of that love; and the universal prohibition of false gods, is a necessary means of keeping our hearts unto him; for if we were allowed to bestow divine adoration on fire, the sun, or any instrument of his munificence, or any statue, or symbol, or any man, or officer, or imaginary being, as his representative, man's shortsightedness would forget God, and soon worship only the creature.

3. Thus the earth is filled with examples of nations relating to idolatry through such small beginnings, as setting up symbols of God's perfections, to be worshipped by the ignorant, instead of the God whose majesty they symbolized.

4. The priesthood and the generality of the learned in most pagan nations, do not worship the idols which they set up for the ignorant to adore; but rather the majesty who is above them, or the power and beneficence which they represent.

5. And in Roman Catholic countries, it is to be feared that many of the ignorant, really terminate their adoration on the cross, the images and pictures, with which their churches are filled; though the mere presence of them in the church is not objectionable.

6. Though God has founded his government in love, and made that the chief sanction of his law, we are not allowed for one moment to imagine that he will not punish sin, or that he will look upon it with any degree of allowance.

7. For in the same breath he tells us that he is a jealous God, visiting iniquity on all that hate him; not as some have said, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon their innocent posterity; but upon their children who abide in their sins.

8. Often it happens that though the father alone may have committed the sin, the children are its beneficiaries. If the fathers have obtained property by fraud and violence, the children who inherit it, receive it, subject to the curse; and unless they make reparation for the iniquity, must expect to be visited with the wrath of God, as for a sin done in their own persons.

II.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: thou shalt not usurp dominion as a ruler; for the name of the Lord thy God is great and glorious above all other names: he is above all, and is the only true God; the only just and upright King over all: he alone hath the right to rule; and in his name, only he to whom he granteth it: whosoever is not chosen of him, the same is a usurper, and unholy: the Lord will not hold him guiltless, for he taketh his name in vain.

1. By the first Commandment God establishes a government among men, which he makes supreme in all things. But as every government, besides laws and the sovereign power whence they emanate, must also have officers by whom the laws shall be administered; so those officers must derive their authority from the sovereign, in legal form.

2. All officers act in the name of him from whom they derive their authority. In the several American States the official acts of most State officers are done "in the name of the people of the State."

3. Officers of the Federal Government, act "in the name of the United States of America." In the monarchies of Europe, official acts are done "in the name" of the sovereign. And in voluntary societies and corporations, the officers act "in the name" of the society or corporation.

4. It therefore appears that to act in the name of any one, is to act by his authority; and to act in the name of God, is to act by his authority.

5. Hence taking the name of God in vain, is taking his authority without being authorized; it is attempting to govern, without being called to that office; in any matter wherein God has declared a law, and appointed an administrator of the law.

6. It follows, therefore, that every form of government among men, which is not instituted of God, is a usurpation. (Zech. xiv, 9, 17, Dan. ii, 44, vii, 14, Rev. xi, 15,) and that every exercise of the proper functions of government under it, is a taking of the name of God in vain, as every exercise of functions not proper to government, is tyranny.

7. Priests made by the authority of man, and not called of God; Priests who constantly profess to have received no dispensation from God, and who deny that he has revealed himself to any for eighteen hundred years, do constantly administer in his name, as boldly as though they were sent by him.

8. They baptize in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; they go about doing works in the assumed power and might of God's ministers, of whom Jesus Christ said, "I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matt. vii, 23.)

9. He did not deny that they had preached, prophesied, or worked miracles in his name. He denounced them as workers of iniquity, because they were unknown to him; that is, were not his ministers. They took God's name in vain.

10. God has appointed a door to the priesthood; a call of God by revelation, and an ordaining by the hands of his ministers; (Heb. v, 4, Ex. xxviii, 1, 1st Tim. iv, 14, Acts vii, 35;) and Christ declares that he that comes not in by the door, but climbs up some other way, is a thief and a robber. (John x, 1.)

III.

Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work; thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy woman-servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates: for in six ages the Lord thy God made the heavens and the earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord thy God blessed the seventh day and hallowed it: thou shalt keep it holy unto him, that thou forget not the Law, nor be found keeping the company of the vile, nor be despised by the righteous.

1. The day of rest originated in the rest of God, when he ceased the work of creation, at the making of man, to have dominion over the earth.

2. It was had in remembrance as an institution of God, before promulgated by his voice in Sinai; (Gen. ii, 2, 3, Ex. xvi, 23;) and there is no ground for believing that the sanctifying of the Sabbath, was not a law among the Patriarchs and the Antediluvians, because it is not mentioned in the scriptures; for from the time of Moses until that of Solomon, when it was unquestionably in force, it is nowhere mentioned.

3. Throughout Christendom, with some slight exceptions, the first day, and not the seventh, is kept as a Sabbath. For this they have no warrant in the scriptures, and pretend to none. (Buck's Th. Dic. "Sabbath.") The reason given for the change, is, that Christ raised from the dead the first day, and the attempt is to justify it by tradition, and the practice of the Church.

4. But, evidently, the Church have no power to change or abrogate a commandment of God, who required us to keep the seventh day, not any other day in the seven.

5. The early Christians did undoubtedly frequently meet on the first day for religious worship, precisely as the Saints do nowadays, in exclusively Christian communities; not because they regarded it as the Sabbath of God, but because on that day, being the regular day of heathen festivals, men would come together to hear them.

6. Keeping the first day as a Sabbath, instead of the seventh, is one of the innovations forced upon Christianity by the Emperor Constantine, to make the change of national religion less difficult.

7. The very language of this Commandment, seems to pre-empt the propensity of man to change the Sabbath; remember the Sabbath day; and God, foreseeing what wicked men would do, has placed on his chosen a special injunction that they keep that day in all their generations for a perpetual covenant; (Ex. xxxi, 13—17;) and awful penalties are denounced against those who abolish it.

8. The Sabbath is appointed for men in every station in life. The crime of exacting labour of children and servants on the Sabbath day, is a great offence unto God. But it is the Sabbath of the beast as well as of men, and to work beasts for our pleasure or profit, is an offence unto God.

IV.

Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: thou shalt not revile him, nor speak evil of him, nor curse him: thou shalt do no injustice unto him; and thou shalt maintain his right, against his enemy: thou shalt not exact rigorously of him, nor turn aside from relieving him: thou shalt deliver him from the snare and the pit, and shalt return his ox when he strayeth: thou shalt comfort him when he mourns, and nurture him when he sickens: thou shalt not abate the price of what thou buyest of him, for his necessity; nor shalt thou exact of him, because he leaneth upon thee: for in so doing thousands shall rise up and call thee blessed, and the Lord thy God shall strengthen thee in all the work of thy hand.

1. As God has founded his government on the dominion of love, and as our principal relations in life are to God as a superior, and to our neighbours as fellows, love to our neighbour is as necessary to a faithful observance of his law, as love to him.

2. All the Commandments which follow after, are but the elaboration of the law, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself;" a law very aptly expressed in that other form of words, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." (Matt. vii, 12, Luke vi, 31.)

3. Many infidel writers of late years, have attempted to derive this precept, under the name of the golden rule, from heathen philosophers, and have claimed that Christ borrowed it from Zoroaster, or Confucius; whereas, they, as well as he, have only copied it, with a slight change of words, from the Commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

4. The doctrine contained in it, is original with God, and does not even date with Moses, but was known in the days of Adam; and it was in violation of this law, as well as that which says, thou shalt not kill, that Cain lifted up his hand against Abel.

5. If all men were under the law of God, this law would introduce a universal brotherhood: a consummation most desirable. But so long as men are found in rebellion against the law of God, it is most important that those who cleave unto it should remember this thing, that they love one another.

6. If any one has really done us an injury, we ought, as far as possible, to believe that he was blinded to the right by the common infirmities of our corrupt nature, rather than that he has deliberately, and of malice aforethought, designed to do a wrong.

7. But if the utmost stretch of charity will not bring us to so favourable a conclusion, still we should remember that his corrupt conduct will injure him more than us, and so remembering, should look upon him as an object of compassion, whom we ought to reclaim, rather than an object of vengeance, to be destroyed.

8. Even when we are obliged to bring him to judgment, our prayer should be that he be not utterly condemned; but that when he is found in the wrong, there may be found room for repentance.

V.

Honour thy father and thy mother: give heed to their commandments, obey their laws, and depart not from their precepts: reverence their age, and seek unto their house all the days of thy life: exalt not thyself against them, nor withhold to build up their house above thine own: honour and obey the King and the Judges, and the rulers, and all that are set in authority; for they are as fathers among the people: that they may be a fear unto evil doers; and the Priest also, who stands before the Lord, that he may instruct thee: and thy days shall be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

1. The Patriarchal ages were distinguished by reneration for parents, and deference to age, as well as by a proper regard for those who by their priesthood, or office, stood as fathers of the people.

2. Even at this day, in some Oriental and Levantine countries, children so honour their fathers and mothers.

3. But in no country on earth, have men so far departed from this rule, as in the United States.

4. It is the continual scandal of the time and country, that children constantly speak of their parents as the "old man and woman;" and as age grows upon them, rather look upon them as encumbrances upon the estate, than as heads of the house.

5. This evil is increasing with time. A single generation back, children were instructed at home and at school, to make obeisance to parents, teachers, and to men and women generally, at entering and leaving a house, at meeting them on all occasions, and especially on receiving favours from them.

6. All this is changed now. Very small children pride themselves on wanting respect to age, station, and parentage. This is all wrong.

7. The general lawlessness which pervades the continent, the boldness with which laws and the ministers of justice are defied, by small bodies of men, grow naturally out of the education of boys, in the customary manner.

8. But due honour to parents, does not consist solely in mere forms. The whole idea that at a certain age a son becomes independent of his father, is vicious.

9. A son should be subject to his father all his days. He should ever look up to him as the head of the house, and though separately established on his own inheritance, should pay such deference to him, as he in turn would desire from his own sons.

10. If parents attempt to use their authority over their sons, for selfish and private ends, endeavouring to make mere servants of them, instead of building them up, they greatly abuse their authority. (Col. iii, 20, 21.)

11. But for that or greater causes, children cannot justly dishonour their parents, though they may refuse submission to mere usurpation.

12. It is every man's duty, as far as in his power, and at as early a period as possible, to establish his sons in such position as to make them useful members of society, remembering that when so established they are yet his sons, and their honour is his honour.

VI.

Thou shalt not kill: thou shalt slay no man in malice; neither thy child, nor thy wife, nor thy bondman, nor thy bondwoman, nor thy servant: nor the child of thy servant: neither shalt thou slay thine enemy, except thou admonish him, and entreat him, and he hear thee not, and God give him into thy hand: thou shalt only slay him in lawful war; and if any man trespass against thee, and break through, and do violence, thou shalt not slay him in revenge. If thou overtake him in the trespass, thou mayest resist unto blood; but except thou slay him in the trespass, thou shalt deliver him to the Judge; he shall judge him, and the hand of the officer shall be on him.

1. In very few Christian countries, have public men had the moral courage to refuse duelling, which once became so thoroughly established as an honourable arbitrament of controversies, as to have a force little less than that of law.

2. Duelling is now, to some extent, discarded. But in place of it has risen up the more barbarous Lynch law, in pursuance of which mobs get up mock courts, to judge those they have already doomed to exile or death.

3. To execute the judgments of such courts, is as much murder, as any killing under any circumstances can be. No amount of evidence of the real guilt of the condemned can give the slightest colour of justification to such a deed.

4. All killing by mobs, or bodies of unauthorized men, acting upon no matter what provocation, and not in open and legal war, belong to the category of mere murder.

5. Nor should that be regarded as legal war, which men by their law have authorized, but only that which the law of God authorizes.

6. Consequently, he who voluntarily enters upon an unjust war, is guilty of murder. As part of the force, he is guilty, when death is inflicted by others.

7. Nor will he be justified, though required by the law of his country; for that which the law of God declares to be sin, man cannot make lawful.

8. It is, therefore, the duty of the Saints, to abstain from all wars which are not authorized by the express word of God, or the plain principles of his law; as from murder.

9. Many laws have been made among men, especially among barbarous nations, which are themselves opposed to the divine law, and enforced with the punishment of death.

10. To have any share, however indirectly, in enforcing such laws, or inflicting the penalties for their violation, is in the last degree culpable.

11. It does not follow, however, that one should rebel against such governments. In most cases it is better to remove beyond their dominion.

12. To those who remain, remonstrance is better than resistance. If one is thus involved in punishment, patient, unresisting submission, is a faithful testimony against sin.

13. Even those trades and employments not necessary for the happiness of mankind, and which minister principally to vices destructive of life, are in their nature murderous, and should be avoided as deadly sins, which God will judge.

VII.

Thou shalt not commit adultery: thou shalt not in any wise lie with the wife of thy neighbour; and if she seduce thee, thou shalt resist her; that thou pollute not thyself, and make not the place of thy house unclean, and destroy not the house of thy neighbour, and

OUR NEW DRESS.

We have six hundred pounds of new type, from the foundry of N. Lyman, Buffalo, being near twice as much as is required for the Islander; with which most of the matter of this paper is made up. We hope our readers will be pleased with the improvement. A very few additions are requisite to make an entire new dress, which we must wait for till spring; until when, we are quite content with the improvement we have made.

The matter of this paper is principally made up of selections from the new "Book of the Law of the Lord," which is being printed at this office; as a matter of convenience we have made up the columns of the same width of the pages of that Book. We offer it to our readers as a specimen of the style of the Book, and to typographers as a rare sample of accuracy in typographic execution. If any one will point out to us an error of the types, in the several articles from that work, to the extent of a turned letter or wrong point, we will send him the Islander one year without charge. And if any one will furnish us the same amount of matter without an error in any other newspaper, we will send him the Islander ten years without charge.

OUR PUBLICATIONS.

Ten years since Mr. Strang commenced the publication of a monthly sheet, called the Voree Herald, less than one-third the size of the Islander; the matter for a whole year being less than four numbers of the Islander. From that beginning has grown up, under every imaginable disadvantage, our present publishing establishment.

The first year (1846) we succeeded in getting out our twelve numbers, though two were of a diminished size. Ten numbers were printed at job offices; Nos. 1, 2, & 3, at the office of the Southport (Kenosha) Telegraph; No. 4 at the office of the Ottawa Constitutionalist; Nos. 5, 6, 7, & 10, at the office of the Elkhorn Star (now Wisconsin Reporter); Nos. 8, & 9, at Calhoun's job office, Chatham Square, New York City; and Nos. 11, & 12, upon the press we now use.

In 1847 we issued forty-one Nos. twenty-seven of which were one-fourth the size of the Islander, and fourteen one-half, making one hundred and ninety-two pages one-fourth the size of a page of the Islander.

In 1848 we issued fifty-two Nos., of which thirty-three were one-fourth the size of the Islander, and nineteen one-half, making two hundred and seventy-eight pages, one-fourth the size of a page of the Islander.

In 1849 we also issued fifty-two Nos., thirty-three one-fourth, and nineteen one-half the size of the Islander; making two hundred and eighty-four pages one-fourth the size of a page of the Islander.

In 1850 down till June 6th, we issued twenty-three Nos. of half the size of the Islander, making one hundred and eighty-four pages, each of one-fourth the size of a page of the Islander; when the office was removed from Voree to Saint James, and the first No. of the Islander issued the 12th December.

The publication at Voree was under the name of "Voree Herald," the first ten numbers, when the name, "Zion's Reveille," was adopted by Mr. Greenhow, then in charge, much against the wishes of Mr. Strang, and continued through twenty-eight Nos., when the name, "Gospel Herald," was adopted, and continued till the publication was removed to Saint James.

In the arrangement of volumes, Vol. first consists of twelve Nos., or fifty-two pages; being a monthly issue for the year 1846, one No. of which is double. Vol. second consists of fifty-two Nos., of two hundred and sixty pages, issued weekly, but somewhat irregularly from Jan. 14th, 1847, till March 16th, 1848.

Vol. third is a regular weekly issue of fifty-two Nos., from March 23d, 1848, till March 18th, 1849, consisting of two hundred and seventy-six pages. Vol. fourth is a regular weekly issue of fifty-two Nos., from March 22d, 1849, till March 14th, 1850, making two hundred and twenty pages. Vol. fifth is a weekly issue of twelve Nos., from March 21st, till June 6th, 1850, making ninety-six pages.

In 1847 we published an edition of nine hundred copies of a series of three tracts, by John E. Page, on the priesthood and the covenants with Abraham. The following year we published an edition of three thousand and five hundred copies of a tract of twenty pages, on the prophetick calling of Mr. Strang, called "The Diamond," and another, a discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Mr. Strang and Mr. Rafferty, of sixty pages, of which one thousand and two hundred copies were issued. In 1848 we published a Hymn Book, of one hundred and seventy-two pages, of which we issued one thousand copies.

All these works are now out of print, except the Diamond, of which about five hundred copies remain on hand. And so great is the demand for them, that it would now be a profitable undertaking to reprint any of them.—The Voree Herald makes a work, in all, of one thousand and four pages, in great demand, and we know of but one entire set in existence; that belonging to Mr. Strang. That belonging to the Saint James Library lacks a single No., and Gilbert Watson's set lacks two Nos.

Since the removal of the office to this place, we have issued the Islander nominally weekly during the season of navigation, and monthly the rest of the year. The publication has been very irregular; and the volumes have been made up by the year, without reference to the number of papers actually issued, and in settling the accounts forty numbers have been allowed for a year's subscription, without reference to the time in which they were issued.

The first No. appeared Dec. 12th, 1850, since when we issued twelve Nos. in 1851, twenty-six Nos. in 1852, three in 1853, twenty-five in 1854, and sixteen in 1855; making eighty-three Nos., when our terms of publication call for two hundred.

During this time we have issued several books; an edition of two hundred copies of the "Book of the Law of the Lord," 80 pages; six hundred copies "Michilmackinac," 48 pages, double column; 1,100 copies "The New Dispensation," by Oliver Cowdery, 44 pages, double column; 1,000 copies "Guide to Eternal Life," by James Hutchins, 12 pages, double column; 1,000 copies "Prophetic Controversy," 44 pages, double column; and are now engaged on the "Book of the Law of the Lord," 2,100 copies, 320 pages.

We shall not make one word of apology for the irregular issue of the Islander. If our subscribers are not satisfied with what we have done, considering what they know of the circumstances, all they have to do is to notify us to stop their paper. Any one who is in advance can have his money back if he prefers it.

We now announce that hereafter the Islander will be published as a daily and weekly paper. The weekly will be issued every week during the season of navigation, and every month during the suspension of navigation, at $2.00 a year, and the daily Islander every day, except Sabbath, during the season of navigation, and every week during the suspension of navigation, at $5.00 a year.

that thou cause no violence in the land: thou shalt not lie with the wife of the stranger; neither shalt thou lie with the wife of thine enemy; lest thy children be scattered abroad, and know not thee, nor the fear of thee be upon them, and they be strangers to the covenant of God, and the whole land be corrupt, and thine offspring be destroyed with the wicked.

1. Few crimes have worked so terrible distraction among men as adultery, that popular vice, which, in these degenerate days, is rather boasted of, than concealed, by the guilty.
2. The most wicked delusion of the times, is that which places the obligation of chastity, on woman alone; visiting the penalty of crime on the victim, rather than on the criminal.
3. Every man of the world understands very well, that with certain trifling limitations, he can indulge in unrestrained licentiousness, without suffering reproach in fashionable society.
4. Worse than this; those who are reputed successful in this crime, are most popular among women, and envied by men. Thus society offers bounties for the crime which, of all others, most desolates the household, and the social circle.
5. There can be no remedy for these evils until chastity becomes the duty of men, as well as women. Such is the rule of God's law. The interdiction of adultery is addressed principally to men, as the persons chiefly bound to preserve the sanctity of this Commandment.
6. This rule was well understood in the days of the Patriarchs, as well as in later times. Joseph resisted the seductions of his master's wife, and numerous instances are recorded where crimes against chastity, were visited on the guilty men, rather than on their victims. (2d Sam. xii, 9, 10. Gen. xxxiv, 1, 2.)
7. Happily for the people of God, this rule, in spite of the corrupt education, which, as Gentiles, they received, has become a sentiment among the Saints, so strong that treating it lightly produces universal indignation.
8. Among Gentiles a man would be laughed at and lose caste, who professed to practise chastity in the face of strong temptation; but a woman once overtaken in sin, is irreversibly disgraced, no matter by what false practices overcome.
9. But among the Saints, a man guilty of adultery, would be avoided as though infected with a plague-spot, and his victim, though deeply disgraced, might hope, by a long course of humility and penitence, for some of that forgiving charity, which, from the infirmities of human nature, all so much need.
10. The crime of fornication is only an inferior kind of adultery. For, as adultery is a pollution of the marriage bed, so fornication is the pollution of the bed of celibacy.
11. Nor should any one imagine for a moment, that any subsequent repentance can justify fornication. For though the law compels the guilty seducer to marry the victim on whom he has begotten seed, he is yet guilty.

VIII.

Thou shalt not steal: thou shalt not trespass upon anything that is thy neighbour's, to take it from him, nor to destroy it: neither shalt thou trespass upon the stranger that dwelleth within thy gates, to destroy his substance, nor to take it from him; for to thee he looketh for justice, and a shield round about all that he hath; and the fear of the Lord thy God is upon him also, and to his righteousness he also seeketh: neither shalt thou overreach him by cunning, nor by stratagem, to take his substance from thy neighbour, nor the stranger within thy gates. Remember that ye were strangers, and were oppressed, and oppress not the stranger, lest his cry ascend to God against you.

1. The general interdiction, "Thou shalt not steal," does not prohibit larceny alone, but all those modes and contrivances, by which one person appropriates the labour or property, of another, unjustly.
2. Even if the unjust appropriation be consummated through legal forms; or the consent of the victim be obtained through deception or fraud; or by taking advantage of mental imbecility; it is stealing as much as where the taking is done secretly, without the consent of the owner.

(Concluded on fourth page.)

THE TRUE GOD.

1. The God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob is our God; this is his name forever, and this is his memorial unto all generations. He created the heavens and the earth, and all things that are in them are the workmanship of his hands. He created man in his own image, that he might have dominion over the earth, and over the beasts of the field, and over the fowls of the air, and over the fishes of the sea.

2. Man, being in the likeness of God's person, they all recognize him as their Lord, and fear him as a God. And notwithstanding his degeneracy, he has retained so much of the divine likeness, that beasts, birds, and fishes, fear him, and his power is over them as a mighty one. It is diminished as he has departed from the likeness and perfections of his Creator: and that spirit of rebellion, which man has received so redundantly, he has communicated to them also, that they rebel against him, as he rebels against God. Yet the fear of man is on them continually; and his dominion is over them throughout the earth.

3. God conversed with Adam as a familiar friend; and walked with Enoch, who was faithful unto him in the midst of a corrupt race: he communed with Noah, the father of a new world; and covenanted by his own oath, with Abraham the faithful.

4. He commanded a fiery law, with a voice of thunder, in Sinai: the earth quaked at the tread of his foot: the rustling of his garment was as low thunder; and his voice as a mighty thunderbolt: the beaming of his face was as the sun in the morning; and the flash of his eye as the fierce lightning. The nations trembled at his presence; and the tribes said, Not unto us; not unto us, Oh Lord God, but unto Moses, be thy voice known.

5. For they heard the voice of God, as the voice of a trumpet; and as loud thunder: and they saw the lightning; and the mountain smoking; and they felt the earth tremble; and they fled far away, crying, Not unto us; not unto us: but unto Moses, declare thy law, Oh God, and we will obey his voice, and live, for who shall abide in thy presence?

6. His word was made known to the Prophets, and his sacraments were established in Israel. Kings ruled in his glorious name; and the nations who forgot him were destroyed.

7. He hath appointed everlasting life in the Lord Jesus Christ, and given the keys of death and of hell to him who alone among mortals, hath uttered the glorious word in all things. He hath begotten him the first born among many brethren; for he is the first begotten of the dead, and hath the keys of the resurrection; and of life forevermore.

8. He maketh his Apostles the witnesses of his Law, unto the nations; and of his gospel unto every kindred, and tongue, and people. His word is among men; and the revelation of his power, in the midst of the earth.

9. The Lord our God is glorious in his perfections; there is none like him. The gods of the heathen have no voice: neither do they see, nor understand. The God of Babylon the Great, the Mother of Churches, before whom all her daughters bow down, is naught; he is as wind, and vanity; he can neither be seen nor heard, nor felt; he hath no dwelling place: where shall any abide with him? Passionless, is he; and can neither love the good, nor hate the evil: who shall adore him, or fear him?

10. Without members and parts; he cannot hear, see, feel, smell, or taste. Neither can he speak, nor come unto those that worship him, nor smite the disobedient and rebellious. Handless, footless, mouthless, eyeless, and earless; a shapeless chaos, conceived in the imagination of the vain: ye shall not fear him, nor bow down unto him, nor adore him.

11. It is apparent that the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, is not the God of the Christian Churches; either of the Mother Church, or of the generality of the Denominations.

12. The Creed of Saint Athanasius, composed during the reign of the Emperor Constantine, is the most perfect and elaborate statement of the Christian doctrine on that subject in existence, and is adopted by nineteen-tenths of all Christendom.

13. It is as follows: Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic Faith.

Which faith, except every one do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish everlastingly.

And the Catholic Faith is this: That we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity.

Neither confounding the Persons, nor dividing the Substance.

For there is one Person of the Father, another of the Son, and another of the Holy Ghost.

But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one; the Glory equal, the Majesty coeternal. Such as the Father is, such is the Son; and such is the Holy Ghost.

The Father uncreate, the Son uncreate, and the Holy Ghost uncreate.

The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible, and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible.

The Father eternal, the Son eternal, and the Holy Ghost eternal.

And yet they are not three eternals, but one eternal. As also there are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreates; but one uncreate, and one incomprehensible.

So likewise the Father is Almighty, the Son Almighty, and the Holy Ghost Almighty.

And yet they are not three Almighties, but one Almighty. So the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God.

And yet they are not three Gods, but one God. So likewise the Father is Lord, the Son Lord, and the Holy Ghost Lord.

And yet they are not three Lords, but one Lord. For like as we are compelled by the Christian verity, to acknowledge every Person by himself to be God and Lord;

So are we forbidden by the Catholic Religion to say, there be three Gods, or three Lords.

The Father is made of none; neither created, nor begotten. The Son is of the Father alone; not made, nor created, but begotten.

The Holy Ghost is of the Father and of the Son; neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding.

So there is one Father, not three Fathers; one Son, not three Sons; one Holy Ghost, not three Holy Ghosts.

And in this Trinity none is afore, or after other; none is greater, or less than another.

But the whole three Persons are coeternal together, and coequal.

So that in all things, as is aforesaid, the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity, is to be worshipped.

He therefore that will be saved, must thus think of the Trinity.

Furthermore, it is necessary to everlasting salvation, that he also believe rightly the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For the right Faith is, that we believe and confess, that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and Man;

God of the Substance of the Father, begotten before the worlds; and Man, of the Substance of his Mother, born in the world;

Perfect God, and perfect Man: of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting;

Equal to the Father, as touching his Godhead; and inferior to the Father, as touching his Manhood.

Who, although he be God and Man, yet he is not two, but one Christ;

One, not by conversion of the Godhead into flesh, but by taking of the Manhood into God;

One altogether, not by confusion of Substance, but by unity of Person.

For as the reasonable soul and flesh is one Man, so God and Man is one Christ;

Who suffered for our salvation; descended into hell, rose again the third day from the dead.

He ascended into heaven; he sitteth on the right hand of the Father, God Almighty; from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

At whose coming all men shall rise again with their bodies, and shall give account for their own works.

And they that have done good shall go into life everlasting; and they that have done evil into everlasting fire.

This is the Catholic Faith; which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost.

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be; world without end. Amen.

4. Among all Christian denominations, except the few small sects known as Unitarians, this creed is substantially, if not literally, subscribed to; the principal departure from it being declare the his voice, and presence?

n to the Prop established in Is us name; and e destroyed.
asting life in keys of death among mor in all things born among st begotten of the resur witnesses of his gospel and people e revelation earth.
s in his per er do they of Babylon hes, before is naught; neither be no dwelling him? Pas
the good, him, or fear he can Neither that wor nt and re less, eye conceived shall not nor adore
the God of the Christian he generally d during the perfect and that subject Christendom. is necessary and undefined, ship one God
ing the Sub of the Son, and of the ly coeternal, h is the Ho
Holy Ghost
prehensible,
Holy Ghost
ernal.
or three un
ble.
mighty, and Almighty.
Holy Ghost id the Holy rity, to ac
Lord; and there begotten reated, but neither Son, not
s. none is er, and co Trinity, k of the tion, that ard Jesus fees, that Man:
fore the born in soul and d inferi two, but but by by uni so God all, rose and of ome to bodies, verlast believe Holy world if not being

that the Greek, and a few small Eastern Churches, hold that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father only; not the Father and Son.

5. In the Catholic and most of the Protestant Churches, this is the declared Creed; but in those where it is not read, and its existence probably unknown, the same doctrine is set down in some different form of words: thus they all bow down before the same God; but not the God of Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apostles.

6. Among the Articles of Religion, of the Episcopal Church, are the following:

I. There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions; of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness; the Maker and Preserver of all things, both visible and invisible. And in unity of this Godhead there be three Persons, of one substance, power, and eternity: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

II. The Son, which is the Word of the Father, begotten from everlasting of the Father, the very and eternal God, and of one substance with the Father, took Man's nature in the womb of the blessed Virgin, of her substance: so that two whole and perfect Natures, that is to say, the Godhead and Manhood, were joined together in one Person, never to be divided, whereof one Christ, very God, and very Man; who truly suffered, was crucified, dead, and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not only for original guilt, but also for actual sins of men.

V. The Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, is of one substance, majesty, and glory, with the Father and the Son, very and eternal God.

7. The Methodist Articles of Religion are a transcript, with slight variations, from the Episcopal; the chief variation being that in the later editions of the Discipline of the Methodists of America, it is not alleged that God is passionless.

8. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob worshipped no such God. None of the Patriarchs knew him. None of the Prophets gave us his word. None of the Apostles were his witnesses.

9. The God who created Adam had a body, with all its parts; for as truly as Adam, when he begat a son, begat him in his own likeness, after his image, (Gen. v. 3.) so truly God, when he created Adam, made him in the likeness and after the image of God. (Gen. i. 26, 27. v. i. ix. 6. 1st Cor. xi. 7. Jas. iii. 9.)

10. Abraham worshipped the same God; for when God visited him, Abraham at first mistook him for a man; and, with genuine Patriarchal hospitality, invited him into the tent to eat, and offered to wash his feet. (Gen. xviii.)

11. Jacob also, worshipped the same God; for after wrestling with him, he tells us he saw him face to face. (Gen. xxxii. 24, 28, 30.) Surely the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, has a body and parts, face and feet.

12. The God who spoke to Moses from the fire in the bush, and in a voice of thunder in Sinai, gave the Commandments; wrote the Commandments on tables of stone, with his finger; (Deut. ix. 10;) conversed with Moses face to face, as a man converses with his friend; (Ex. xxxiii. 11;) passed by, covering Moses with his hand, and allowed him to behold his back parts. (Ex. xxxiii. 22, 23.) Truly this is not the God without body or parts, which Episcopalians, Methodists, and all other Christians worship.

13. The God of the Prophets and Apostles was in bodily form, with all the appropriate parts, as imaged in his creature man; for he had Arms, (Jer. xxi. 5. Job xl. 9. Ps. lxxxix. 13. Isa. lii. 10. Luke i. 51.)

Hands, (Jer. xxi. 5. Hab. iii. 4. Ex. xxxiii. 22, 23. Acts vii. 55, 56. v. 31. Rom. viii. 34.)

Loins, (Ezek. i. 27. viii. 2.)

Feet, (Ezek. xliii. 7. Hab. iii. 5. Gen. xviii. 4.)

Face, (Gen. xxxii. 30. Ex. xxxiii. 11, 23. Num. xiv. 14. Luke i. 76.)

Eyes, (2d Kings xix. 16. Deut. xxxii. 10. Hab. i. 13. Heb. iv. 13.)

Ears, (2d Kings xix. 16. Num. xiv. 28. 2d Sam. xxii. 7. Ps. xxxiv. 15.)

Nostrils, (Ex. xv. 8. 2d Sam. xxii. 16.)

Mouth, (Isa. xxx. 2. Lam. iii. 38.)

Lips, (Isa. xxx. 27. Ps. xvii. 4.)

And tongue, (Isa. xxx. 27.)

14. The appearance of God was the likeness of man, when he appeared to Ezekiel, and called him to the Prophetic office; though he was surrounded with fire and a glorious radiance, from his loins upwards and downwards. (Ezek. i. 26, 27.)

15. Their God was stirred up with the passions of Love, (Deut. vii. 8. Jer. xxxi. 3. John iii. 16. xvii. 23. 1st John iv. 16. Mal. i. 2. Rom. ix. 13.)

Jealousy, (Ex. xx. 5. xxxiv. 14. Deut. iv. 24. v. 9. vi. 15. Josh. xxiv. 19. Ezek. xxxix. 25. Nah. i. 2. Zech. vii. 2. 1st Cor. x. 22. 2d Cor. xi. 2.)

Anger, (Pa. vi. i. vii. 11. Isa. xxx. 27. Jer. xxi. 5. Nah. i. 3, 6. Hab. iii. 8, 12.)

Indignation, (Isa. xxx. 27. Nah. i. 6. Hab. iii. 12. Zech. i. 12.)

Wrath, (Jer. xxi. 5. Nah. i. 2, 6. Hab. iii. 2, 8.)

Hatred, (Jer. xxi. 5. Hosea ix. 13. Mal. i. 3. ii. 16. Rom. ix. 13. Prov. vi. 16. Isa. lxi. 8.)

Pity, (Jer. xxi. 5. Nah. i. 2, 6.)

And revenge, (Nah. i. 2.)

16. It is sometimes objected, that "God is a spirit," (John iv. 24.) So are Angels "spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation;" (Heb. i. 14;) yet when Abraham and Lot saw them they mistook them for men, (Gen. xviii. 2, 5, 16—20. xix. 1, 15.) and John the Revelator mistook one for God, and was about to worship him, but he said, "See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the Prophets." (Rev. xxi. 8, 9.)

17. Those who worship a God without body, parts, or passions, do not worship the God of Abraham, of whom Prophets spoke and Apostles bore witness; but an idol—a false god, which their imagination conceives of; and as by their Creed, he is a nonentity, their faith is Atheism.

18. Close upon the tail of this Atheism, follows Polytheism. For as the Creed declares that the Father is Lord God Almighty, uncreate, eternal, and incomprehensible; the Son, Lord God Almighty, uncreate, eternal, and incomprehensible; and the Holy Ghost, Lord God Almighty, uncreate, eternal, and incomprehensible; it is most indisputably the Creed of three gods, notwithstanding the disclaimer, which says they are one God.

19. Thus they worship God the Father, "without body, parts, or passions;" and God the Son, begotten by the Father, with "body, flesh, and bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature," sitting at the right hand of God, the Father, who has no hand; and God the Holy Ghost, who proceeded from the Father and the Son, who is, nevertheless, eternal, though he could not have proceeded from the Son, until he was begotten; three gods, all unlike; and require men to believe these three, but one, on pain of being damned everlastingly.

20. It is no wonder that those who preach this doctrine declare it a mystery. It is a greater mystery, that men have been found to believe it. Well did John the Revelator name the Church in which it originated, "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and abominations of the earth." (Rev. xvii. 5.)

21. She was once the Apostolical Church; the Lamb's wife; but when she lost the Apostolical Priesthood, and went off in an unholy union with the Kingdoms of this world as her Lord, she became what the Angel declared her to be, a whore: all her daughters, prostituting themselves to the various national governments, without ever being lawfully joined to Christ, are only harlots.

22. To make their Creeds as ridiculous as they are infidel; false as they are heathenish; Catholics teach that Christ's mother is the "Mother of God;" as though God was begotten by himself, on a creature of his hands, that he might be eternally begotten.

23. And Protestants, not willing that Catholics should monopolize all the folly and all the falsehood, have invented, or borrowed from their mother, the doctrine of an infinite atonement, by means of infinite sufferings in the crucifixion of one of these three gods.

24. And, as by their faith, these three gods are one and the same god, it follows that the Lord God Almighty, uncreate, eternal, and eternal, became a Priest unto himself, and offered himself a sacrifice unto himself, to make propitiation unto himself for sins against himself, and became a mediator between himself and his rebellious creatures; and has risen from the dead, though he alone hath immortality, and ascended on high, where he has received all power from himself, and sat down at his own right hand; where, with his human body, flesh and bones, and all that pertains to the perfection of man's nature, raised to immortality and everlasting life, he is the express image of the invisible God, (Col. i. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.) and the express image of his Father's person (Heb. i. 3.) who has not any such body or any part of it, and is nevertheless the same identical person with himself.

25. This is not the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Ye shall not bow down to the God of Babylon, for the God who spoke in Sinai, said, "Thou shalt not bow down unto, nor adore anything that thy imagination conceiveth of; but the Lord thy God only."

26. The God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, was not the offspring of adultery; nor was he born of woman; he was not carried about in a nurse's arms, nor dependent on his mother's milk for sustenance; he never died, nor did he cry to himself, and find no helper. (Matt. xxvii. 46. Mark xv. 34.) Eternal ages are but pulsations in his lifetime, and his might is omnipotence.

11. The Lord our God hath an incommunicable name; never polluted by the breath of the ungodly: which none can know, but he who ministereth in his holy sanctuary; by which he revealed himself unto Moses; and in which he establisheth this law, for an everlasting covenant.

This incommunicable name is not Jehovah. That is written instead of it. For his secret name was only written in that copy of the Law kept in the Ark of the Testimony. How ridiculous to believe with Christians, that that name of God which Abraham was not permitted to know, (Ex. vi. 3.) was written in a published book, for all the Heathen to read. It was never spoken out of the Sanctuary, nor above the breath, and then only between three High Priests, after the order of Melchisedek. (See Josephus' Ant. B. ii. ch. xii. 4.)

12. God alone hath immortality. Adam the first of men, the Ancient of Days, the great Prince; Abraham, to whom God gave an everlasting possession; David, whose throne was established as the days of heaven, forever; all died. Enoch, who walked with God, and was not found, because God took him; and Elijah, who ascended to the throne of God, in his own fiery chariot; shall return to the earth to sleep with their fathers. The change which is sealed upon all the sons of Adam, shall come upon the faithful, who stand on the earth, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on those who know not God, and obey not the gospel. And he, the Prince of the Kings of the earth; who in the days to come, shall speak with the voice of a trumpet, and the dead shall hear his voice and live; died once, that he might live forevermore. He praised God, who alone hath immortality, that he would not leave him in the place of the dead: he preached the gospel to the spirits in prison, and obtained the key of life everlasting; but God alone liveth forever: the eternal ages are unto him as moments to us: infinities, as units to the mathematician. Our God alone hath immortality. Thou shalt love him with all thy heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength.

13. God alone hath omniscience. He clothed himself in light as a robe: his ministers, who at midday, are as a flaming fire in the dark night, are blind before him; he apprehendeth the motion of the atom which floateth in the invisible element, and discerneth the speck in the centre of the star, which the light of the sun hath not reached since the day that the sons of God shouted for joy that the earth was created, as a mountain in the eye of mortals. He never sleepeth; his eye closeth not; and there is no darkness before him. Our God alone hath omniscience. Thou shalt love him with all thy heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength.

14. God alone hath omnipotence. He looketh upon the nations, and they melt in the fury of his countenance: he frowneth, and the mountains dissolve to smoke; the vallies are consumed in the breath of his nostrils. He spoke, and worlds were created: he thought, and they were lost in space. Earthquakes are but the whisperings of his voice; the rustling of his attire causeth lightning, and thunder; and with the shadow of his garment he blotteth out the sun. The Prince of the Kings of the earth; by whom the world was created; and who liveth and reigneth forever; receiveth power from him, and rendereth it unto him. Who shall stand before him? Our God alone hath omnipotence. Thou shalt love him with all thy heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength.

15. God alone is omnipresent. His presence filleth the immensity of space as a point. In the midst of the bottomless pit, is he; the pavilion of his feet, is the face of the earth: the stars, are his home: his breath, is fragrant odour to the blessed, in the highest heaven; and it enliveneth the crumbling frame of the dead. The rays of the sun, have not found his bourn; nor the light of the stars, the place he inhabiteth not. His rest outspeedeth the lightning; it leaveth the morning ray behind it; and his speed is more rapid than the thought of angels. Our God alone is omnipresent. Thou shalt love him with all thy heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength.

16. God alone is one. There are choirs of angels; hosts of spirits; and multitudes of men: but God hath no fellow. A great King, is to him as the unseen spawn before the monsters of the deep; Methuselah, as the ephemera of a day: the most glorious spirit, is bodiless, and a breath. And the Lord Jesus, who created the earth, and redeemed it; whose kingdom filleth the earth, and the heavens; possesseth but a speck, amid the stars he made. He alone is one. Thou shalt love him with all thy heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. Thou shalt adore him, and serve him, and obey him; and beside him, thou shalt have no other God: for he alone hath immortality, and omniscience, and omnipotence, and omnipresence. He alone is one; and they who obey his law, shall be like him.

CALENDAR FOR 1856.

	SUNDAY	MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY	FRIDAY	SATURDAY
JAN.	6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31
FEB.	3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28
MARCH.	2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31
APR.	6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30
MAY.	4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31
JUNE.	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30
JULY.	6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31
AUG.	3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31
SEPT.	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30
OCT.	5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31
NOV.	2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30
DEC.	7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31

METEOROLOGY.

The winter has usually been spoken of as uncommon severe. By comparison with previous years, very little difference is found, except that this winter is more changeable than usual. Compared with former years, the result is as follows:

	1855	1854	1853	1852	1850
Coldest day,	3.66	4.66	13.66	11.87	15.00
" obs.,	2.00	1.00	10.00	6.00	10.00
Warmest day,	44.66	39.66	40.16	41.50	33.50
" obs.,	46.00	42.00	45.00	44.50	38.00
Mean at 7, a. m.,	22.88	22.75	25.31
" 3, p. m.,	25.53	25.85	27.52
" 9, p. m.,	21.98	23.09	25.41
Monthly mean,	23.48	23.86	26.05	25.42	27.02

The month of January, for the same winters, compare as follows, the present month being brought down to the 20th:

	1856	1855	1854	1853	1851
Coldest day,	-8.00	4.66	3.00	9.50	-2.75
" obs.,	-9.00	1.00	-1.00	7.00	1.00
Warmest day,	29.33	50.33	34.00	37.50	38.25
" obs.,	32.00	53.00	38.00	40.00	43.00
Mean at 7, a. m.,	10.75	19.67	14.74
" 3, p. m.,	17.60	24.83	18.29
" 9, p. m.,	16.35	22.51	16.09
Monthly mean,	14.90	22.76	16.41	26.76	29.46

Thus December is only four and a half degrees colder than the warmest December, that of 1850; but January is fourteen degrees colder than January, 1851, and one and a half degrees colder than 1854.

It will strike every one with surprise that the difference between this and previous winters is so small, this having been spoken of as an uncommonly severe winter. We can only account for it by this: that people are now much better housed than formerly, and therefore more sensible to cold; and the further fact that the Island is more opened, and therefore winds are more felt.

The general expectation is that the latter part of the winter will be milder. Those who observe wild game say they have made little preparation for winter, and those trees which occasionally winter most of their leaves are quite naked.

The schooner Hope, wrecked at the entrance of this harbour last fall, lies on the rocks a little inshore of where she struck, and has not yet gone to pieces. The wheat all washed out the third of December. The inhabitants saved considerable quantities for cattle feed, and dried a small quantity for grinding.

The schooner Crescent, wrecked on Paros, (North Fox,) is entirely broken up. Only a small portion of her cargo was saved.

Provisions are abundant, though at rather high prices.—Flour is worth $16 per bbl, pork retails at 12 1/2 ts. per lb., beans $2.00 per bushel, potatoes 50 cts. per bushel, wheat $1.25 per bushel, corn $1.00, and there will be grain for sale next spring.

Mr. Strang has a most splendid carved case, of Indian manufacture, a present from Kim-me-one.

Kim-me-one, who was one of the most active in the transactions of 1851 against the Mormons, was here this week with peace offerings. He is a noble Indian. Certain that he became hostile only by being grossly deceived, the Mormons never took up a grudge against him, but ever treated him with kindness. Love and truth have finally conquered; and while we write this, this distinguished brave is inviting his friends to the feast of reconciliation.

Kim-me-one was a personal favourite with Mrs. Strickland, author of the "Lives of the Queens of England," when in Mackinac, in 1836, and is mentioned with affection in her "Rambles."

AMUSEMENTS.

The holidays are so long past, that a notice of the festivities of the occasion is hardly in time now.

Our neighbours who are on missions will be pleased to learn that for eight days, from Christmas to New Year's, inclusive, was a general time of feasting. One splendid party danced out the dying year, and three gave a spirited welcome to the new one. This is as it should be, only New Year's day is the wrong time of year.

It ought to be astronomically determined, instead of arbitrarily.

The Maid of the Mist was lost between this place and Charlevoix the 25th Nov. Messrs. Pierce, Preston, D. See and Bump were lost.

LAYARD'S CONFIRMATION OF SCRIPTURE.

After all the attention which has been given to Layard's discoveries among the ruins of Nineveh, we doubt whether the public mind in general is fully aware of the nature and extent of the confirmation which they bring to the truth of Scripture history. It may be useful here to set out, in the briefest form, a specimen of some of the general results of these discoveries.

They show, in conformity with the tenor of Scripture, that the earliest ages were not, as many think, barbarous ages; but that the race of men, originally enlightened from a divine source, had, at first, a high degree of general knowledge, which they gradually lost through their defection to idolatry. It has been demonstrated by these excavations, not only that a high state of the arts existed in Nineveh a thousand years before Christ; but also that in the earliest ages of that city, dating but a few centuries from the flood, their sculptures were the best. In this remarkable result the Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities also agree.

It is also proved, contrary to the general impression, that idolatry was introduced when men had a better knowledge of the true God than afterwards prevailed; that it did not grow up as a religion of nature, by the ineffectual attempts of men to find the true God. But it was introduced as an expedient of men in order to obscure what knowledge of God they possessed, because they did not like to retain God in their knowledge. This is shown in the fact that the earliest representations of God found in these sculptures are the best, and immeasurably exceed anything of the kind existing in after ages; especially in their approach to the true idea of God. So that idolatry came in not for want of light, but by an abuse of light. Men, knowing God, and yet not willing to glorify him as God, became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened.

The Scriptural account of the great antiquity of Nineveh and the Assyrian Empire agree with these records dug out of the ruins of Nineveh. The Scriptures date the building of the city not long after the flood; and the fact that the same marble materials have been used in successive structures, and that ancient buildings had been placed on the ruins of those still more ancient, and other unmistakable indications, the conclusion is made clear, that the city had all the antiquity which the Scriptures ascribe to it.

These monuments also bear upon them the record of the fulfillment of prophecy. Nahum prophesied that the city would be plundered of all its treasures, so that none would be left. Layard has found, in all his excavations, nothing in the form of gold or silver; a fact which is remarkable, if the city had not been thoroughly plundered before it was burned. The prophet foretold, that the invaders would obtain easy access to some portions of the city; and that, wherever the inhabitants should resort to the strong holds, these would be burnt. Now the ruins show just this result; that some parts of the city were destroyed by fire, and others escaped.

But a more striking confirmation is found in the fact, that inscriptions, on the ruins of one of the palaces, gives the records of the military career of Sennacherib, with just such a series of conquests, and just such boasting of them, as the Scriptures ascribe to him. For instance, the Bible tells us that Hezekiah rebelled against the king of Assyria; that in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign, Sennacherib came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took from Hezekiah three hundred talents of silver and thirty of gold. Now compare this with the historical inscription on Sennacherib's palace: "Because Hezekiah King of Judah, did not submit to my yoke, I took, and plundered, forty-six of his strong fenced cities and innumerable smaller towns, but I left him Jerusalem his capital city; and because Hezekiah still refused to pay homage, I attacked and carried off the whole population which dwelt around Jerusalem, with thirty talents of gold and eight hundred talents of silver. This agrees with the Bible account, except in respect to the quantity of silver." As to this, the one account may describe what was delivered by Hezekiah, and the other the whole product of his plunder.

The chamber of Sennacherib's palace presents, in sculptures and inscriptions, the siege of the Jewish city Lachish. The king is sculptured, in royal pomp, on his throne, and over his head is this inscription, "Sennacherib, the mighty king, king of the country of Assyria, sitting on the throne of judgment before the city of Lachish; I give permission for its slaughter." In the Scriptures, the destruction of the city of Lachish is represented to have been his most difficult work; and, of course, it was a victory on which he would most plume himself, as these sculptures show that he did.

Another coincidence appears in this, that in the historical sculptures there are marks of a sudden and final interruption of the work, such as would naturally follow from the violent death of the king as described in the Bible.

In the ruins of Babylon there is no sculptured marble. The city was built all of brick. The bricks often have the characters stamped upon them. In one instance a huge palace is formed of brick thus stamped; and the same characters exhibit the name of "Nebuchadnezzar." The prominent characteristic of Nebuchadnezzar was his pride—such as was revealed in that speech: "Is not this great Babylon that I have built, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" Now, these ruins of the palace, in every brick of them, give just the echo of that boasted speech. Thus, after so many centuries, God has brought forth, from the ruins of these cities, voices in response to what the inspired penman had recorded so many centuries before.

(Continued from second page.)

3. Obtaining property by gambling is stealing; for the owner receives nothing for that with which he parts; and the inducement of each to the undertaking, is the hope of obtaining of the other something for nothing.
4. Taking property in pledge for debts or advances disproportionate to the amount pledged, and retaining it forfeited for nonpayment, is another mode of stealing.
5. Letting money on mortgage, and buying the mortgaged property at the mortgage sale for less than its value, is stealing; and if two combine, one to take the mortgage, and the other to buy the property, both are alike guilty.
6. Buying or selling property to be delivered on time, at a fixed price, and operating on the markets to produce an artificial scarcity or abundance, so as to obtain money for releasing the contract, or damages for the nonperformance of it, or any similar transaction, equivalent to that, is only a civil mode of stealing.
7. In fine, all those speculative transactions, by which one man obtains from another anything valuable, without making what is esteemed by both parties a just and full equivalent, partakes of the nature and guilt of theft.
8. But these definitions do not include letting money at reasonable interest. For the use of money is of substantial worth, and it is just that one who borrows money to make money by the investment of it, should pay for the use of it.
9. Nor do they extend to buying property in quantity, to be retailed at a higher price; for the subdivision and keeping open market is a just consideration for a higher price. And so of all legitimate commercial transactions, where a real difference in the value of property is produced by transportation, transmutation, or timely retention.
10. Neither do they extend to cases where bounties are offered to the successful competitors in any laudable undertaking, and truly awarded, and so received.

IX.

Thou shalt not bear false witness: thou shalt not speak falsely before the King, nor before the Judge, nor in the assembly of the Princes, nor in the presence of the Ruler, nor unto the Minister of the Law, nor among the multitude; nor in the ear of thy friend, nor to thy wife, nor thy child, nor thy servant: neither shalt thou withhold the truth from the King, nor the Judge, nor him that is set in authority: for thus shall righteousness be established in all thy borders.

1. At Common Law a man is liable to be punished for bearing false witness, only when under oath; and then only in cases where the proceeding is judicial, the oath false, the intention wilful, the assertion absolute, the falsehood material to the matter in question, and the person legally sworn. (Clay's Crim. Law, Vol. ii, p. 302, 303.)
2. So narrow is this rule, that any person may swear in the most solemn manner to anything whatever, no matter how false, in any case not in the course of proceedings at law, and he is subject to no punishment.
3. And on a trial for perjury, if it should turn out that the Magistrate before whom the perjury was committed was not duly qualified, or that in some manner he had failed to get jurisdiction of the cause, or that the particular part of the testimony wherein the perjury was committed was not material to the issue, no matter how corrupt the intention, or how false the testimony of the accused, he would go clear, legally.
4. Indeed, so loose is the rule of law among Gentiles on this subject, that for all practical purposes nearly all perjury, and every form of false witness not under oath, is lawful.
5. If it should be alleged that the laws against libel and slander are a restraint upon false witness in cases less than perjury, it should be remembered that the action for a libel is not founded on its falseness, but on its tendency to cause a breach of the peace; and an indictment for a libel lays for printing the truth, as well as a falsehood, though lately this rule has been slightly modified.
6. And the action for slander cannot be maintained, simply for bearing false witness against another; but for falsely accusing him of some indictable offence, involving moral turpitude, or subjecting him to infamous punishment: (5 Johns. R., 188; some act injurious to him in his profession or business: (8 Johns. R., 64. 1 Johns. C., 330. 5 Johns. R., 476. 17 Johns. R., 217;) or anything by which he suffers a pecuniary injury. (10 Johns. R., 281. 5 Cow, 351. 1 Wend., 506.)
7. Under these rules perjury and slander, false witness in nearly every form, are actually legal. One may, by his falsehoods, keep the neighbourhood in a perpetual broil; speak evil of dignities, and almost all manner of falsehood of the parent of God's creatures, and the law has no bridle for his tongue.
8. The Law of God changes all this. It exacts truth of all men, in all places, when it allows anything to be put in issue; and takes no denial, when it makes inquiry.
9. Its searching supervision goes into the family circle, and forbids that a man speak falsely to his wife, his child, or his servant; and among the multitude it rebukes the talebearer, and forbids all men to raise a false report.

Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's inheritance: thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, nor his bondman, nor his bondwoman, nor his manservant, nor his womanservant, nor his horse, nor his carriage, nor the instruments of his labour, nor the produce of his land, nor the things that he has made, nor the treasures that he has in store, nor anything that is thy neighbour's: thy desire shall not be upon them, to take them by stealth, nor by fraud, nor by cunning, nor by violence: neither shalt thou covet that which belongeth to the stranger that dwelleth within thy gates; but thou shalt improve thine own, and thy desire shall be unto it; lest thou be corrupt, and the hand of thy neighbours be against thee, and the cry of the poor ascend to God against thee.

1. Other systems of Law are satisfied with external actions. God's Law demands the allegiance of the heart. It will not be satisfied because our actions appear to be righteous; only when we are moved to them by just motives.
2. Thus we are not merely forbidden to steal, but we are forbidden to desire our neighbour's property. We are not merely forbidden to usurp dominion which God has bestowed on another, but we are forbidden to desire the possession of it.
3. Covetousness does not consist in the desire to increase our substance, and multiply riches; for that desire is laudable. Covetousness is the desire to obtain that which is another's, rather than to increase our own by production.
4. Many men, possessed of industry and talent, spend their lives in a series of efforts to make themselves rich on the possessions, or out of the earnings of others; when, with equal efforts, they could produce wealth.
5. So great is this propensity, that there are numerous occupations and professions, the chief business of which is, not to make anything valuable, or add value to anything in being, but to get away something from the owner; and either leave him destitute, or to new tools to supply himself.
6. Such business is unlawful. If our neighbour has a good farm, we have a right to desire as good; but we have no right to desire his, even for a price. Our desires ought to be to our own, and we should seek to improve that, and make it desirable, rather than get away that of another.
7. God created all the land for man. Man made none of it. Why should he sell it? There is enough for all, if they will but go and possess it. Why take that of any man, when there is countless millions as good, unoccupied?

8. It is the duty of every man to obtain an inheritance, if he has none, and labour faithfully to improve it, and make it a good inheritance for his posterity; and that his desire be unto it; and to the substance which he shall accumulate, and not to that of his neighbour.

9. And it is not right to seek to purchase, or to tempt any one to sell that which he needs for himself, or his household. We should rather produce for ourselves, or buy that which was produced for the market.

NOTE ON THE DECALOGUE.

1. From time immemorial the Constitution of God's Kingdom has been entitled, "The Decalogue," or the "Ten Commandments." There can be no greater evidence how poorly the oracles of God have been kept, than the fact that among Christian sects none know what these Commandments are.
2. Protestants read and divide them as follows:
 - I. Thou shalt have none other gods but me.
 - II. Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, nor the likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth: Thou shalt not bow down to them, nor worship them; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, and visit the sins of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; and show mercy unto thousands in them that love me, and keep my commandments.
 - III. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. For the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.
 - IV. Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all that thou hast to do; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt do no manner of work, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, thy manservant, and thy maidservant, thy cattle, and the stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it.
 - V. Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.
 - VI. Thou shalt do no murder.
 - VII. Thou shalt not commit adultery.
 - VIII. Thou shalt not steal.
 - IX. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.
 - X. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house; thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his servant, nor his maid, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is his. (Common Prayer. Catechism.)
3. The objection to this reading and division is, that the first and second are one and the same Commandment; for the language, "Thou shalt not make unto thyself any graven image, nor the likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth; thou shalt not bow down to them, nor worship them," are but an elaborating of the previous language, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." The Commandment contained in them is one.
4. As these are one Commandment, and only eight follow after, Protestants have but nine. To conceal this error some theologians have asserted that the first Commandment was contained in the words, "I am the Lord thy God" (Ex. xx, 2. Deut. v, 6); which are no Commandment, for they are in the affirmative, not the imperative; and are not the substance of what Jesus asserts to be the first Commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." (Matt. xxii, 37.)
5. These words of Jesus, though not found in the Old Testament, are sometimes used by Protestants as the first Commandment. But the intent of the Commandment evidently is, that we shall bestow divine adoration on God alone; and it therefore as truly includes the interdiction, "Thou shalt not serve," as the mandate, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God;" so, if these words are taken for a portion of the first Commandment, the number ten is not supplied. As will might the Sabbath-day Commandment be divided so as to make that one Commandment which requires us to work six days, and another which requires us to sanctify the seventh day, and still another which interdicts all work on the seventh day. (Ex. xx, 8—11. xxxi, 13—17. Deut. v, 12—15.)
6. Roman Catholics divide and read the Commandments as follows:
 - I. I am the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt not have strange gods before me. Thou shalt not make to thyself a graven thing, nor the likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, nor of those things that are in the waters under the earth. Thou shalt not adore them, nor serve them.
 - II. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.
 - III. Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day.
 - IV. Honour thy father and thy mother.
 - V. Thou shalt not kill.
 - VI. Thou shalt not commit adultery.
 - VII. Thou shalt not steal.
 - VIII. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.
 - IX. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife.
 - X. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's goods. (Metropolitan Catholic Directory, 1843, p. 7.)
7. By this reading it is evident they have but nine Commandments; for it is certain that the interdiction, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife," and, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's goods," are but an elaboration of the general interdiction, "Thou shalt not covet anything that is thy neighbour's."
8. To this it is sometimes objected that coveting, or desiring, a neighbour's wife, is a different crime from coveting a neighbour's ox; because the ox is property, but the wife is not. It is equally true that by the Law of God, manservants and maidservants are not property. They are all persons, over whom man exercises some sort of dominion, and in whom, by virtue of that dominion, he has some kind of interest, though that interest is not a property.
9. Therefore, if the interdiction, "Thou shalt not covet or desire thy neighbour's wife," is a different command from that, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's ox," so also is that, "Thou shalt not covet his manservant." But neither is a different Commandment, for this only is contained in all, "Thou shalt not covet anything that is thy neighbour's," whether it is his property, or his dominion.
10. Josephus has also preserved a version of the Commandments, much abbreviated, as follows:
 - I. The first Commandment teaches us that there is but one God, and that we ought to worship him only.
 - II. The second, commands us not to make the image of any living creature, to worship it.
 - III. The third, that we must not swear by God in a false manner.
 - IV. The fourth, that we must keep the seventh day, by resting from all sorts of work.
 - V. The fifth, that we must honour our parents.
 - VI. The sixth, that we must abstain from murder.
 - VII. The seventh, that we must not commit adultery.
 - VIII. The eighth, that we must not be guilty of theft.
 - IX. The ninth, that we must not bear false witness.
 - X. The tenth, that we must not admit of the desire of anything that is another's. (Josephus' Ant., B. iii, ch. v, 5.)
11. The works of Josephus have been preserved and brought down to us by Christians, who have been so anxious to avoid themselves of the testimony of so distinguished a writer, that they have made several alterations in his writings, which have materially diminished the value of his testimony on any question depending on verbal accuracy.
12. Among other things, these Commandments must have been tampered with; for, by the first, we are commanded to worship the true God, and "him only." Yet, by the second, we are forbid to worship "the image of any living creature," which is tautology; for that would be worshipping another God.
13. And the third Commandment forbids swearing falsely by God; whereas, the ninth forbids bearing false witness; which is nearly the same thing; the chief difference being, that under the third, any oath except that by God, might be broken with impunity.

14. It is possible that the Commandments were in a much mutilated form as early as Josephus' time, though not equal to this. Be that as it may, it is certain that this is not the form in which they were given.

15. For as in this reading, the first and second are one Commandment, and the third and ninth one, there are but eight in all: both that which forbids assuming the name of God in vain, and that requiring us to love our neighbour as ourself, being wanting.

16. The erasure of the second Commandment must be a post Christian work, for no Jew could be suspected of attempting to blot out the fact that God was King in Israel; that he had established his own Law there, and called men to govern in his name, and that he will not hold guiltless those who take his name in vain.

17. This lack in the number of the Commandments, and the consequent disingenuousness in dividing them, is the more singular, and evinces so much more the theological blindness of mankind, (Matt. xv, 14. Luke, vi, 39,) from the fact that the lost Commandment is, nevertheless, contained in the Scriptures, both of the Old and New Testament.

18. In the same discourse in which Jesus Christ says, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind; this is the first and great Commandment," he also says, "And the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Matt. xxii, 37—39). The same language had been used before by Moses, (Lev. xix, 18,) though in the present state of the Scriptures, it is not in its proper place among the Commandments. (Ex. xx. Deut. v.)

19. Thus, though the Bible does not contain above nine Commandments, in a body, in any one place, nor the New Testament above six, (Rom. xiii, 9,) the ten are substantially contained in them.

20. Had the divine spirit guided and inspired the theologians of Christendom; in the impossibility of making more than nine Commandments, in the reading which they adopted, they would have looked to the words of Christ, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Matt. xxii, 39. Mark, xii, 31. Luke, x, 27. Rom. xiii, 9. Gal. v, 14. James ii, 8,) to supply the lack, as he declared this to be one of the Commandments.

21. The wisdom of men never made the discovery. It was left till the translation of the plates of Laban, by the gift and power of God. But the discovery once made, the Bible of all the sects is our witness.

22. The Commandments, as here given, were translated by the Prophet James, from the plates which were taken by Nephi from Laban, in Jerusalem, (B. of M. 1st Nephi i,) and brought to America, in the time of Zedekiah, King of Judah; and are the substance of the two tables, written by the finger of God in the days of Moses.

23. Though the exact words of the two tables were never written in any book, (Josephus' Ant. B. iii, ch. v, 4,) except that kept in the most holy place, the substance was carefully written out by the inspired Prophets, and to the paraphrases so prepared, all transcribers of repute made their copies conform.

24. Subsequent to the Babylonish captivity, the Jews were without the Divine Tables, and the literal copy of the Law which belonged to the Sanctuary. They had only the copies used by the Prophets. These have long since been lost.

25. The Jews were not fond of allowing their sacred books to pass into the hands of the Gentiles. Jews had become very numerous in Alexandria, and the use of the Greek language among them was so general, that vast numbers were unable to read Hebrew, before the translation of the Old Testament into that language.

26. Even then the translation into the Greek language was made at the instance of a powerful and liberal King, Ptolemy Philadelphus, who obtained this favour of the Jews by liberating many of them from captivity, rather than of their own disposition. From the account of Josephus (Ant. B. xii, ch. ii,) it is doubtful how much of the Sacred Oracles were translated; but the reasonable inference is, that it was a portion of the Old Testament as in the tripartite division of the Law, and Psalms, was called the Law, so the books of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, the two books of Samuel, and the two books of Kings.

27. But these are not the "Book of the Law of the Lord," for that was written by Moses, and placed in the Ark of the Testimony in his day; (Deut. xxxi, 24—26;) whereas, many of these books were written subsequently.

28. This tripartite division of the Old Testament was subsequent to the Babylonish captivity, and the name "Law" appears to have been adopted, because those books contained numerous recitals and illustrations of the Law, and were a convenient substitute for the book itself, which had become very rare.

29. It is reputed, however, that the genuine "Book of the Law," that is, an authorized paraphrase of it, was actually translated into Greek in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus; and numerous incredible tales are found on the subject in old Jewish legends, nearly all of which, in a still less credible form, have been preserved by the Christians of the third and fourth centuries, as applicable to the Septuagint Bible.

30. The most credible history of this translation is that contained in the Hebrew preface to the Book of Jasher, (Jasher, p. xvii,) where, after giving an account of the translation of the other sacred books for Ptolemy Philadelphus, the writer says: "After some time the persecutors of Israel became aware of this, that the Israelites had not sent the Book of the Law to the King, and they came and said unto him, 'O King, the Israelites have treated thee with contempt; for they did not send to thee the Book of the Law, which we had mentioned to thee, but they sent to thee another book, which they had in their hands; therefore send to them that they may forward unto thee the Book of their Law; for from that book thou wilt obtain thy desire, much more than from the book which they have sent to thee.' So when the King heard their words, he became exceedingly wroth against the Israelites, and his anger burned within him until he sent again to them for them to forward to him the Book of the Law. Fearing that they might still continue to scorn him, he acted prudently with them, and sent to seventy of their Elders, and placed them in seventy houses, that each should write the Book of the Law, so that no alteration might be found in it; and the divine spirit rested upon them, and they wrote for him seventy books, and they were all of one version, without addition or diminution. At this the King rejoiced greatly, and he honoured the Elders, together with all the Jews; and he sent offerings and gifts to Jerusalem, as it is written there. At his death the Israelites acted cunningly with his son, and took from his treasures the Book of the Law, but left the Book of Jasher there, and took it not away, in order that every future King might know the wonders of the Lord, blessed be his name, and that he had chosen Israel from all nations, and that there is no God beside him."

31. All this carries with it the air of probability, except the assertion that seventy separate translations were made, of the entire book, which is doubtless a mere mistake in the relation, by some person over fond of the marvellous. Each translator was assigned his portion or seventieth part of the Law to translate, without communicating with the others; and as the parts, when put together, formed a continuous series or code of laws, the King was satisfied that they had furnished him the genuine Book of the Law; though the translation was not quite as perfect as it might have been, had the seventy been allowed to help each other.

32. But this book, so placed in the Alexandrian Library, it is expressly asserted, was withdrawn from the Library at the end of that reign, and no trace of it is found in the history of the Eastern Continent, at any subsequent period. The anxiety of the Jews to prevent its falling into the hands of the Gentiles was so great, as to preclude the multiplication of copies, and in their various persecutions the few copies in existence were lost.

33. The tables of stone had never been restored since the Babylonish captivity. Consequently, before the Christian era, the sole evidence of the import of the Ten Commandments was oral tradition, and such books as incidentally related the substance, without attempting to give the words of them. Had not God preserved them, we should now be without them, as our fathers were, and Christians are.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. VI.—NO. 2.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, FEB. 14, 1856.

WHOLE NO. 85.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (13 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

FILLIBUSTER SCHEME.

The government is in possession of affidavits and documents, going to show that a wide-spread movement has been commenced all along the Atlantic seaboard of the United States to send men and arms to Nicaragua, for the purpose of organizing an army in that State, to descend upon Cuba and San Domingo, and wrest them from their present possessors.

After the consummation of this design, the parties interested in the movement propose to unite in one confederacy the State of Nicaragua, and such other portions of Central America as may be acquired by conquest or otherwise, Cuba and San Domingo, and either to set up a separate republic, or to apply for admission into the American Union.

It is alleged that thousands of the most reckless adventurers in the Atlantic cities have already been enlisted in this movement, and that the ranks of the would-be invaders are daily augmented by extensive accessions from the interior. The information is said to have been derived from the man who was to have gone out as General of the expedition. Five persons have been arrested, as leaders of the expedition, and held to bail. Warrants are out for many others.—N. Y. Times.

What it Costs to Govern New York City.

The Comptroller of New York City recently published an estimate of the amount necessary to carry on the municipal government for the next year, giving the total as $6,500,000. On Tuesday evening, in the Board of Councilmen, the Finance Committee, after having considered the Comptroller's estimate, reported that it would be absolutely necessary to add thereto the sum of $454,382; or, in other words, that the tax for the next year will fall but a trifle below seven million of dollars—an increase over the tax levy for 1854, of one million, ninety-nine thousand, five hundred and fifteen dollars.

DISCOVERY OF AN EMERALD PLACER.—A correspondent of the New York Sun writes that it is believed at the War Department that one of the officers of the United States exploring expedition, discovered some thirteen miles south of the line of the Gadsden purchase, one of the emerald mines which has remained unknown to the world since the conquest of Cortez, and is now getting up an expedition for that region, to prospect for gold and gems, both of which are said to abound in the region indicated.

The London journals announce the death, at an old age, of Robert Bunyan, the last male descendant, in a direct line, from John Bunyan, the author of "Pilgrim's Progress."

BAPTISM.

1. EXCEPT a man be born of the water, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

1. The language, "born of water," as found in this Law, and in the discourse of Jesus to Nicodemus, is sufficient to settle the controversy as to the manner in which baptism should be administered.

2. For a birth is a coming forth out of something that covers and conceals. Such is baptism, only when the subject, being covered in water, is brought forth out of it.

3. It would be folly in the extreme to say of one, upon whom a few drops of water had been sprinkled, or a small quantity poured, that he was born of the water. It cannot even be said that he is sprinkled, or poured. It is the water that is sprinkled, or poured.

4. Nor can any one say that this language, "born of the water," was not used of baptism. For if baptism is not the thing here spoken of, then there is another ceremony to be administered in water, besides baptism, so entirely essential that without it no one can enter into the Kingdom.

5. And that other ceremony would also be baptism; that is, an immersion in water. For as no one can dispute that it is necessary to be born of water, in order to enter into the Kingdom, so, whether baptism is or is not an immersion, nevertheless, immersion is essential to entry into the Kingdom.

6. This discourse of Jesus with Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, has given a further key to the manner of administering baptism. He reproached Nicodemus for not understanding what it was to be born again.

7. Why that reproach? Because the Jews were at that time making considerable numbers of converts to their faith, all of whom were baptized; and they always spoke of this baptism as a new birth.

8. Maimonides, one of the most distinguished of the old writers on Jewish theology, after relating that proselytes were received into the Jewish faith, males by circumcision, baptism and sacrifice; and females by baptism and sacrifice, adds, "A Gentile who has become a proselyte, and a slave who is set at liberty, (on embracing the faith,) are both, as it were, new born babes; which is the reason why those who before were their parents are now no longer so." (Clarke's Flourish, B. iv, ch. i, p. 273.) Hence a master in Israel could not be ignorant how a man should be born a second time.

9. Baptism was most clearly treated as regeneration, or a new birth, by Jesus, during his ministry. He said to Peter, and the rest of the Apostles, "We which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." (Matt. xix, 28.)

10. In what had the twelve Apostles followed? The regeneration. What is regeneration? Buttermore says: "Regeneration, is the change and renovation of the soul, by the spirit and grace of God. (John iii, 5, 6.) It is called the new birth, and consists in the infusion of spiritual life into the soul, (John v, 25,) whereby it is capable of performing spiritual actions, and living unto God. (Rom. xiv, 3.) But Con.)

11. Buck says: "Regeneration, a new birth; that work of the Holy Spirit by which we experience a change of heart. It is to be distinguished from baptism, which is an external rite, though some have confounded them together. The evidences of it are, conviction of sin, holy sorrow, deep humility, knowledge, faith, repentance, love, and devotedness to God's glory." (Buck's Th. Dic., p. 395.)

12. These are standard writers of Protestant theology, and their definitions express the doctrine of most Protestant sects. But they are irreconcilable with the teaching of Jesus.

13. For if regeneration is a change of heart, evidenced by conviction of sin, and repentance, as Buck says; if, with Buttermore, it is a change and renovation of the soul; how could he undergo that change? how could he be convicted of sin, and repent, who was without sin? (Heb. iv, 15, vii, 26.)

14. The language of Jesus, "ye who have followed me in the regeneration," just as truly implies that he whom they followed was regenerated, as that they who followed were. And as he who was without sin, could not repent and turn from sin, and was nevertheless regenerate, so repenting and turning from sin, is not regeneration.

15. The change of heart or turning from sin to holiness, which has been mistaken for regeneration, is in the gospel denominated repentance, and is a prerequisite to baptism, without which no one, once in sin, can become regenerate.

16. In this view of the matter, Paul spoke of the baptism of water as the washing of regeneration, and that of the Spirit as the receiving of the Holy Spirit, shed abundantly on us through Jesus Christ. (Tit. iii, 5, 6.)

2. But no man may have baptism of water, except such as have faith toward God, and come unto him through the ministry he has sent; repenting of evil deeds, and seeking to learn righteousness by the living word: for this is the door of all into the kingdom; from eight years old and upwards; through which if ye enter not, ye shall not see God.

1. To be a lawful candidate for baptism, it is necessary to have faith toward God, and to repent of all sin. Without these prerequisites, baptism will avail nothing.

2. Without faith it is impossible to please God. (Heb. xi, 6.) This faith does not consist merely in believing in the existence of God. It is necessary to believe in actual communion with him; in the language of Paul, that he is the rewarder of those who seek him. (id.)

3. In sending out the Apostles to preach the gospel in all the world, Jesus gave them this promise, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." (Mark xvi, 16.) Believeth what? The word preached. Thus belief is a prerequisite to baptism.

4. So Philip taught the eunuch of Ethiopia, when he inquired of him why he could not be baptized. "If thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest." (Acts viii, 37.)

5. But faith toward God will not alone qualify one to receive baptism. It is equally necessary to repent of all sin, whether of action, word, or thought.

6. The Apostles, when they received their commission to preach the gospel in all the world, were sent to preach repentance, and the remission of sins. (Luke xxiv, 47.)

7. Very soon after receiving this mission, when Peter was inquired of by his congregation what they should do, (to be saved,) he replied, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts ii, 38.)

8. This repentance is that conversion, or change of heart, of which the sects so often speak under the name of regeneration; their error being chiefly this, that they think that to be regeneration, which in fact is its necessary prerequisite.

9. But baptism will be unavailing, if it is not administered by those duly authorized of God. The doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church, that it may be administered, not only by a Priest, but by a layman, a woman, or an infidel; and that it will be valid, so the intention is right, is absurd.

10. For, baptism is the sacrament by which and in which sins are remitted, and unauthorized Priests, laymen, women and infidels have no authority to remit sins.

11. This doctrine is made very plain in the gospel. The authority conferred on the Apostles by Jesus, was to go into all the world, preaching repentance and the remission of sins to every creature; (Luke xxiv, 47, 48;) witnessing unto them, he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; and he that believeth not, shall be damned; (Mark xvi, 16;) and baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. (Matt. xxviii, 19.)

12. The reason of this rule is plain. For sin is an offence against God. He being the party wronged, has the right to forgive or to withhold forgiveness.

13. Nothing is clearer, therefore, than that he has the right to prescribe the conditions on which he will forgive sin, and the manner in which he will do it, and to confer the authority to grant the remission, upon whomsoever he will; and that no man can validly exercise that authority, except he has not the authority of God.

14. All sects substantially admit the soundness of this rule, by confining the administration of the rite, under ordinary circumstances, to those whom they regard as God's Ministers. Their occasional aberrations from the rule grow out of the defects and innate follies of their various systems of theology.

15. Nor is there any other door into the Kingdom, by which men may enter. Children under eight years old, are not subjects of baptism, because at that tender age there is not a foundation for intellectual responsibility. If made liable for the consequences of their conduct, they have not the intelligence to so act that their conduct shall be the counterpart of their intentions.

16. But the sole fact of their freedom from the stain of actual sin, does not authorize them to enter the Kingdom by any other door; for Jesus was without sin, (Heb. iv, 15,) and yet it was necessary for him to be baptized. (Matt. iii, 13-16. Mark i, 9. Luke iii, 21.)

17. Not pursuing these special cases any further, the general rule is so clearly laid down, that no one can come into the Kingdom, except through valid, authorized baptism, that it is only a matter of surprise that any believer of the gospel should have ever doubted it. Nor is it possible that any who has faith in the gospel should be in doubt on the subject, after reading the testimonies in God's word.

3. For the keys of the ministry of the remission of sins, in the sacrament of baptism, hath the Lord your God bestowed upon his Apostles; and through them, upon their fellow-labourers, the High Priests, Elders, and Priests; commanding them to preach repentance and remission of sins, to all nations throughout the earth.

1. The keys of authority to baptize for the remission of sins belongs to the Priesthood after the order of Melchisedek, in all its grades. Priests of the Aaronic order are also authorized to baptize for the remission of sins.

2. John the Baptist was of the Aaronic Priesthood. Yet his principal ministry was in preaching repentance and baptism for the remission of sins; that is, the baptism of repentance. (Matt. iii, 1-3. Mark i, 4. Luke iii, 3.)

3. And when Jesus gave the Apostles the plenary authority, in all cases throughout the earth (Matt. xxviii, 18) to remit and retain sins, (John xx, 23,) their first use of the power in behalf of new converts was in the washing of regeneration, or baptism for the remission of sins. (Acts ii, 38.)

NOTE I.—THE MANNER OF BAPTISM.

1. A most singular and uncalled for controversy exists among Christians, as to the manner of baptism, there being three rites or forms in use, each of which is offered as a valid manner, to wit: immersing the subject in water, pouring water upon him, and sprinkling a few drops on him.

2. The Greek Church, which uses the New Testament in the language in which it was written, has always practised immersion, and denies that the members of the Latin or Roman Church are Christians, because they are unbaptized.

3. The oldest Church edifices in Europe, both in Protestant, Greek and Romanist countries, are provided with baptismal fonts for the immersion of adults; and it is matter of undisputed history, that sprinkling and pouring were not used until quite modern times, except on the plea that the health of the subject would not admit of immersion.

4. Romanists, among whom sprinkling and pouring originated, justify it, not by Apostolic institution, but by the authority of the Church to change forms and ceremonies.

5. It is not a little singular that Protestants, who deny all authority of the Church over the sacraments, and claim that the Scriptures are a complete rule of faith and practice, should follow the Romanists in that for which they claim no warrant from the Bible, and justify under the authority of Romish Councils.

6. But nearly all Protestants do so follow the canons of the Church of Rome. The Methodists have carried the folly farther, by leaving the question of the manner to be determined by the subject. (Discipline, ch. i, sec. xxi, l. ch. iii, sec. ii, pp. 103, 109, edition of New York, 1836.)

7. And this folly is practised by numerous other sects, though it carries with it the scandalous admission that the ministers of those sects are not capable of instructing their converts in religious ceremonies, but need to be instructed and guided by them.

8. If three manners had been originally instituted, the Minister of God, rather than a new convert, would be the proper person to judge which was appropriate to the occasion. And if one mode was instituted, and that had fallen into disuse, it is ridiculous that the solution of that doubt should be referred to one not yet introduced into the Church, rather than a Minister of God's Law.

9. But it is nowhere pretended that more than one mode of baptism was originally instituted; and among those who are acquainted with early Church history, and the Greek language, no pretence is made that the mode was other than immersion.

10. Romanists, who instituted other forms, admit unhesitatingly that they rest on the authority of the Church, and not on warrant of Scripture.

11. The apparent doubt which hangs over the subject in the English language, grows out of the fact that the Scriptures have never been duly translated.

12. The English version of the Bible was made by sprinklers; not baptizers. When they came to the words rendered in English, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," (Mark xvi, 16,) they translated all but one word. The word, "baptizeth," they did not translate. To have done so would have decided the controversy in favour of the Baptists. They Anglicised it into the word "baptized," and thus left the controversy where they found it.

13. These translators, when the sacrament of baptism was not involved, found no difficulty in translating the same word. Translating the Old Testament, not from the original tongue, as the title page represents, but from the Septuagint, they made no difficulty in translating "and Naaman went down and dipped himself seven times in Jordan," rendering "baptized" "dipped."

14. In the Greek language this sacrament is always named by the word "baptizo," which invariably signifies "immersion;" whatever cavillers may say to the contrary, when they have an audience who do not read Greek. Of numerous examples, the following, selected from the classics, will be satisfactory:

15. "But when the sun had dipped himself (Greek, baptized himself) into the flood of the ocean, and the dark shining moon leaped in the stormy night, then went forth the warlike men who dwelt in the northern mountains."—Orpheus.

16. "When a piece of iron is taken red hot from the fire, and is dipped (Gr. baptized) in water, the heat, being quenched by the peculiar nature of the water, ceases."—Heraclides Ponticus.

17. Polybius, describing a naval engagement between the Romans and Carthaginians, in which the latter were defeated, says that "on account of the weight of the vessels, and the unskillfulness of the rowers, they sunk (Gr. baptized) many of them."

18. In relating the siege of Syracuse, he says: "The greater part of their vessels being sunk (Gr. baptized) they were filled with consternation." In speaking of the naval engagement between Philip and Attalus, which happened near Chios, he says: "Attalus seeing one of his quinqueremes (galleys with five oars in a row) sunk (Gr. baptized) by one of the enemy's vessels," &c.

19. "As when one dips (Gr. baptizes) the vessel into the fountain of water."—The Greek Scholiast on Euripides.

20. "The crown often dips (Gr. baptizes) herself from the head to the top of the shoulders in the river."—The Greek Scholiast on Aristas.

21. "And I plunging (Gr. baptizing) you in the waves of the sea, will destroy you in the briny surges."—Alcibiades in Jacob's Anthol.

22. "Finding Cupid among the flowers, I caught him and plunged (Gr. baptized) him into wine, and drank him up."—Anacreon, in his Ode on Love in the Heart.

23. Æsop, in his fable of the Ape and the Dolphin, relates that the dolphin having generously undertaken to carry an ape ashore, who had been unfortunately wrecked at sea, became vexed with him for telling him a falsehood, and sinking (Gr. baptizing) him, "killed him;" that is, he plunged him under the water; till he was drowned. In the fable of the Shepherd and the Sea, he says: "The vessel being in danger of being sunk" (Gr. baptized), &c.

24. Diodorus Siculus, speaking of the sudden swelling of the Nile, says: "Many of the land animals are overtaken by the river, and being sunk (Gr. baptized) perish."

25. In another place he says: "The Admiral's ship being sunk (Gr. baptized), the armament was thrown into great confusion." In another he says: "The river rushing down, with a violent current, sunk (Gr. baptized) many and destroyed them."

26. Baptizo always denotes a total immersion. If only a part of a thing be immersed, still it is an entire immersion of that part, and the context limits its extent. Thus, Polybius says: "The foot soldiers passed through, (the water,) scarcely immersed (Gr. baptized) to the paps."

27. The Fathers of the Protestant Reformation, and the most learned Protestant Divines, have admitted, contrary to their practice, that immersion is the proper form of baptism.

28. Thus Calvin, though he contends that "whether the person who is baptized be wholly immersed, and whether three or once, or whether water be only poured or sprinkled upon him, is of no importance," yet says, in the same section, "The very word baptize, however, signifies to immerse; and it is certain that immersion was the practice of the ancient Church." (Institutes, Book iv, ch. xv, sec. 19.)

29. "Baptism is a Greek word, and may be translated immersion, as when we immerse something in water, that it may be wholly covered. And although it is almost wholly abolished, (for they do not dip the whole children, but only pour a little water on them,) they ought, nevertheless, to be wholly immersed, and then immediately drawn out; for that the etymology of the word seems to demand."—Luther.

30. "Christ commanded us to be baptized; by which word it is certain, immersion is signified. Baptizethai, in this place, is more than nipetein; because that seems to respect the whole body, this only the hands. Nor does Baptizein, signify to wash, except by consequence; for it properly signifies to immerse for the sake of dying. To be baptized in water, signifies no other than to be immersed in water, which is the external ceremony of baptism. Baptizo differs from the verb dunai, which signifies to plunge in the deep and to drown."—Beza, (on Mark vii, 4.)

31. "The act of baptizing is the immersion of believers in water. This expresses the force of the word. Thus also it was performed by Christ and his Apostles."—Vitringa.

32. "Christ commanded us to be baptized, by which word it is certain immersion is signified."—Hospius.

33. "To baptize, among the Greeks, is undoubtedly to immerse, to dip; and baptism is immersion, dipping. Baptismos en Pneuma; agrio, baptism in the Holy Spirit, is immersion into the pure waters of the Holy Spirit; for he on whom the Holy Spirit is poured out, is, as it were, immersed into him. Baptismos en puri, baptism in fire, is a figurative expression, and signifies casting into a flame, which, like water, flows far and wide; such as the flame that consumed Jerusalem. The thing commanded by our Lord is baptism; immersion into water."—Gartelius.

34. "The words Baptizein and Baptismos, are not to be interpreted of aspersion, but always of immersion."—Buddens.

35. "Baptism is immersion, and was administered in former times, according to the force and meaning of the word."—Salmasius.

36. "The word Baptizein, to baptize, is nowhere used in the Scripture for sprinkling."—Vennart.

37. Professor Fritzsche, a disciple of Hermann, (in his Com. on Matt. iii, 6,) says: "Baptism was performed, not by sprinkling, but by immersion; this is evident, not only from the nature of the word, but from Rom. vi, 4."

38. "The word baptism, according to etymology and usage, signifies to immerse, submerge, &c.; and the choice of the expression betrays an age in which the latter custom of sprinkling had not been introduced."—Augusti.

39. "The word corresponds in signification with the German word taufen, to sink into the deep."—Brenner.

40. "Baptism is perfectly identical with our word immersion or submersion, (tauchneider untertauchen.) If immersion under water is for the purpose of cleansing, or washing, then the word means cleansing or washing."—Free Inquiry respecting Baptism, Leipzig, 1802.

41. Again, "The baptism of John, and that of the Apostles, were performed in precisely the same way; that is, the candidate was completely immersed under water." Speaking of Rom. vi, 4, and Gal. iii, 27, it says: "What becomes of all these beautiful images, when, as at the present day, baptism is administered by pouring or sprinkling?"—id.

42. "An entire immersion belongs to the nature of baptism. This is the meaning of the word." "In the word Baptizo and Baptisma is contained the idea of a complete immersion under water; at least, so is Baptisma in the New Testament."—Bretschneider.

43. "The word baptize signifies, in Greek, sometimes to immerse, sometimes to submerge."—Paulus Com.

44. "Baptism consists in the immersion of the whole body in water."—Scholz, on Matt. iii, 6.

45. Professor Lange, on Infant Baptism, says: "Baptism, in the Apostolic age, was a proper baptism; the immersion of the body in water. As Christ died, so we die (to sin) with him in baptism. The body is, as it were, buried under water—dead with Christ; the plunging under water represents death, and raising out of it the resurrection to a new life. A more striking symbol could not be chosen."

46. Bloomfield, in his Critical Digest on Rom. vi, 4, says: "There is here plainly a reference to the ancient mode of baptism by immersion; and I agree with Koppe and Rosenmüller, that there is reason to regret it should have been abandoned in most Christian Churches, especially as it has so evidently a reference to the mystic sense of baptism."

47. Rosenmüller, (on this passage,) says: "Immersion in the water of baptism and coming forth out of it, was a symbol of a person's renouncing his former life, and, on the contrary, beginning a new one. The learned have rightly reminded us that on account of this emblematic meaning of baptism, the rite of immersion ought to have been retained in the Christian Church.

48. Neander, in his letter to Judd, says: "As to your question on the original rite of baptism, there can be no doubt whatever that in the primitive times, it was performed by immersion, to signify a complete immersion into the new principle of the divine life which was to be imparted by the Messiah."

—Judd's Reply to Stuart.

49. Dr. Knapp, an eminent and pious German divine, speaking of the passage in question, says: "We are, like Christ, buried as dead persons by baptism, and should arise, like him, to a new life." "The image is taken here from baptized persons, as they were immersed, (buried,) and as they emerged, (rose again.)"

50. John Wesley, on Rom. vi, 4, says: "Buried with him alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion."

51. "It being so expressly declared here, Rom. vi, 4, and Col. ii, 12, that we are buried with Christ in baptism: by being buried under water; and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death, by dying to sin, being taken hence; and this immersion being religiously observed by all Christians for thirteen centuries, and approved by our Church, and the change of it into sprinkling, even without any allowance from the author of this institution, or any license from any council of the Church, being that which the Romanist still urges to justify his refusal of the cup to the laity; it were to be wished that this custom might be again of general use, and aspersions only permitted, as of old, in case of the sick, or in present danger of death."—Whitby.

52. "Anciently those who were baptized put off their garments, which signified the putting off the body of sin, and were immersed and buried in water, to represent their death to sin; and then did rise up out of the water, to signify their entrance upon a new life. And to these customs the Apostle alludes, when he says: 'How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein? Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?' Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism."—Archbishop Tillotson.

53. Chrysostom proves the resurrection from the Apostolic mode of baptism, as follows: "Our being baptized and immersed in the water, and our rising again out of it, is a symbol of our descending into hell or the grave, and of our returning from them."—Chrys. Hom.

54. "In the time of the Apostles, the form of baptism was very simple. The person to be baptized was dipped in a river or vessel, with the words which Christ had ordered, and, to express more fully his change of character, generally assumed a new name. The immersion of the whole body was omitted only in the case of the sick, who could not leave their beds. In this case sprinkling was substituted, which was called clinical baptism. The Greek Church, as well as the schismatics in the east, retained the custom of immersing the whole body; but the western Church adopted, in the thirteenth century, the mode of baptism by sprinkling, which has been continued by the Protestants, Baptists only excepted."—Edinburgh Ency. Baptism.

55. The word Baptizo is still used by the Greeks, and they mock to utter scorn the absurdity of supposing that it means sprinkle or pour. They employ terms of contempt for those practices, and always immerse any members who join their Church from other Churches, where they have only received sprinkling or pouring.

56. Professor Stuart says: "The mode of baptism by immersion, the Oriental Church has always continued to preserve, even down to the present time. The members of this Church are accustomed to call the members of the Western Churches 'sprinkled Christians,' by way of ridicule and contempt. They maintain that Baptizo can mean nothing but immerge, and that baptism by sprinkling is as great a solecism as immersion by sprinkling; and they claim to themselves the honour of having preserved the ancient, sacred rite of the Church free from change and corruption."—The Mode of Baptism.

57. "The Oriental Church has not only preserved unchanged the custom of immersion, but declares it so essential that they rebaptize those who were sprinkled, and by way of contempt call them 'sprinkled Christians.'"—Augusti.

58. Walch says: "The Greeks not only immerse the candidate three times under water, so that the water closes over his head, but consider that such a mode of baptism is essential. They reject sprinkling."—History of Religious Controversies.

59. Dr. Wall says: "The Greek Church, in all the branches of it, does still use immersion."—History of Infant Baptism.

60. Dr. Knapp, (Professor of Theology in the University of Halle,) says: "In the Greek Church they still hold to immersion. It would have been better to have adhered generally to the ancient practice, even as Luther and Calvin allowed."

61. Stourtan, a native Greek, (in a work published in 1816,) says: "Baptizo has but one signification. It signifies, literally and invariably, to plunge."

62. The Greek Patriarch, Jeremiah, says: "The ancients were not accustomed to sprinkle the candidate, but to immerse him."—Walch's Controversies, out of the Lutheran Church.

63. Christopolis, a Greek, in his "Confession of Faith," says: "We follow the example of the Apostles, who immersed the candidate under the water."

64. The great standard of the Greek Church is the Pedalion, (the Helm,) duly authenticated by the Patriarch and Holy Synod. The Pedalion speaks thus: "We say that the baptism of the Latins (Roman Catholics) is baptism falsely named." (Gr. Pseudonon Baptisma.) Again, "The Latins are heretics of old, specially from the very fact that they are unbaptized." (Gr. Abaptistoi.) Again, "The more ancient Latins, the first to make innovations upon Apostolic baptism, practised pouring." (Gr. Epkusin;) that is, they poured a little water upon the crown of the child's head. And this is still practised in some places at the present time. More, however, now, with a bunch of hogs' bristles throw a few drops of water three times upon the child's forehead." Again, "Observe, then, that we do not say, that we rebaptize (Gr. Anabaptizomen) the Latins, but that we baptize (Gr. Baptizomen) them, since their baptism (Gr. Baptisma) is a lie in its very name. It is not baptism at all, but bare sprinkling." (Gr. Kantima.)

65. A celebrated treatise, authenticated by the Patriarchs of Jerusalem, Constantinople, and Alexandria, is called Rantismou Skeletusis, (an exposure of sprinkling.) Here are the titles of some of the chapters:

"A Demonstration that Sprinkling is not Ancient, and that the Proof adduced by Papists are LIES."

"Reproofs of the Fathers against Sprinkling."

"A Demonstration that the Law of the Church to admit the Latins as Baptized was made when they were accustomed to Baptize as we do. Also Witnesses from Latin Authors that Sprinkling was not received from them."

"A Demonstration that Baptism is the Command of the Lord; Sprinkling that of Satan."

"A Demonstration that Sprinkling, being Satanical, is opposed to Divine Baptism."

"A Demonstration that Sprinkling, being a Heretical Dogma, is under Anathema."

66. If any one point is made out in theology, it is this: that Christian baptism, in the days of Christ and the Apostles, was an immersion of the whole body in water, and that there is no authority for any different mode, but the assumed power of the Roman Catholic Church to change the ordinances of God.

67. And the thing made out is not that one mode of baptism is better than another; but it is that immersion only is baptism; that pouring and sprinkling are not.

NOTE II.—THE SUBJECTS OF BAPTISM.

1. It has been already shown (post xi, 2, note, p. 119) that faith and repentance are prerequisites to baptism. These facts alone ought to put an end to all question as to whether infants are proper subjects of baptism.

2. Calvin has made a most ingenious argument in favour of baptizing the children of believers, on the assumption that baptism came in place of circumcision, which was administered to infants. (Institutes, B. iv, ch. xvi.) All Pedobaptists follow him.

3. It will not be necessary to trace the course of his argument, for the following reasons: 1st. Faith and repentance were not requisite to circumcision; and therefore, if baptism was substituted for circumcision, it was upon new conditions, which excluded infants. 2d. Circumcision was not administered upon females; therefore, if baptism was a substitute for it, females would be excluded. 3d. Circumcision was the seal of the covenant, by which Abraham and his posterity have the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; (Gen. xvii, 10—14;) and as that grant was for a thousand generations, at least, (1st Chron. xvi, 15—18; Ps. ev, 8,) the seal of circumcision has not been superseded; but must be kept by all Israel, on pain of forfeiting all share of the inheritance.

4. There is another objection to Calvin's argument, which reduces it to an absolute absurdity. If the children of believers are entitled to baptism, as a substitute, because Abraham's children were to circumcision; then are their servants also, and all slaves bought with money or born in their houses; for all the servants of Abraham and of his posterity, whether born servants, or bought servants, were just as much entitled and required to be circumcised as his children; and this without reference to age, faith, or any other condition, except owing service to Abraham and his posterity. (Gen. xvii, 10, 11, 23, 27.)

5. An attempt has been made to prove infant baptism by several New Testament cases, of the baptism of a whole household. But in no one of these cases is it mentioned that there was an infant in the house. In the present dispensation several hundred instances have occurred of baptizing a whole household; yet never a child under eight years.

6. The rule may, therefore, be laid down as a safe and universal one, that believers, whose hearts are free from the love of sin, and they only are subjects of gospel baptism; and that such are truly buried with Christ in baptism, and raised, resurrected or regenerated to a new and holy life.

7. Nor is it necessary to submit the question of baptism to the Church to be acted on by them. The Apostolic practice was, and now is, to baptize all of eight years old and upwards who offer themselves for baptism, professing faith toward God, and repentance of all sin. None but hypocrites, and those who come to mock the sacraments, or the Ministers of God, are refused. Nor are they delayed from night till morning, or from morning till night.

8. The candidate need not be questioned as to the general soundness of his faith. It is enough that, like a little child, he be ready to learn of the Minister of God.

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, FEB. 14, 1856.

The Detroit Tribune says Mr. Peck promised the Mormons certain appointments as Light House Keepers, as the reward for voting for him. Happy to hear it. So far what appointments we got, we had to get over his head. If he has finally come to his senses, and concluded to remember justice to his constituency alike, without proscription for conscience sake, none would be happier than we to learn it.

Know-Nothings excepted, we believe politicians in office know their constituents as partisans; not as theologians. What was it to Mr. Peck, that of the 153 votes he got in Mackinac, 140 were Catholics; of the 695 in Emmet, 651 were Mormons; and of 350 or over at Grand Traverse, something like 80 or 100 were Protestants, less than a dozen Catholics, and the rest non est inventus? Does it make any difference to him what a man's religion is, who votes for him? If office is to be regarded as a spoil, and the spoils really belong to the victors, why not let the victors have them? If they do not, why do all parties practice by that rule? Did Mr. Barnes ever lay the motion to his soul that he had the office of Clerk of the House, because he was the best qualified? Did he ever dream for one moment that he received the office for any other reason than as a reward for nasty work, which better men were unwilling to do, in the preceding campaign?

If Mr. Peck was worthy of the votes he received in Emmet county, he will treat the citizens of that county just precisely as he does the rest of his constituents. If he was not worthy, they ought to have some compensation for the nasty work, as well as Mr. Barnes.

But nothing can be more false than to pretend that the Mormons have been favoured in these appointments. When the present administration came in, Emmet county was unanimously Democratic, and Mackinac was Democratic by a large majority. There were some twenty appointments to be made in Mackinac, and five in Emmet. Yet Mackinac got all of her own, and four of the five here.

In bringing about this result the Democrats of Mackinac got up a new edition of Mormon atrocities, which set all the world agog for seven days. So far from making any secret of our position, Mr. Strang, over his own signature, answered the grave charges made against the Mormons through the NEW YORK TRIBUNE; showing that the whole difficulty originated in an ungenerous struggle for a few small offices; upon which the editors of that paper endorse with emphasis, the justice of our cause, and the wickedness and patent folly and falsehood of the accusations against us.

Our position has always been, and ever will be, that men who get office by our votes shall not procure the appointment of our enemies to office over and among us; and that in proportion to the support any party receives among us, it shall share with us the patronage. If the Tribune disapproves this rule, we should be pleased to have it speak out. Those who have heretofore been inclined to its side, will take note accordingly.

If Mr. Peck has any political aspirations hereafter, he has not been wise in forgetting this rule. The Mormons have never yet entertained a suspicion that they were any less men than any body else in the State.

Though they asked of Mr. Peck no pledge, they did not expect him to treat them as negroes. And the fact that they have been able to get a few appointments over his head, and that occasionally a Mackinac man has to walk the plank to make room for them, should remind others, as well as the Mormons, that they do not need to make bargains; that however unjust politicians may be at heart, numbers command respect.

SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE.

It has been a matter of question here whether the Hon. G. W. Peck was not altogether hostile to this portion of his constituency. Some of his warm personal friends held on to the hope that he was really friendly to them also, notwithstanding appearances were against him.

Late unlooked for events have satisfied them that he does not owe them any good will, and is unequivocally opposed to their interests, and common equality with other citizens. Of these events the most convincing is the continual attacks of the Detroit Tribune on Mr. Peck as the Mormon Representative.

Now it is well known that the Tribune always goes by contraries; that it never asserts anything with great positiveness, except what is known to be false, and adheres so strictly to the rule of never telling anything but lies, that it is enough to disgrace any man for that paper to speak well of him.

The late change in the editorial department of that paper has not improved it in this respect. At the last session of the Legislature Mr. Barnes, now editor of the Tribune, was Clerk of the House and proprietor of a little country sheet, as well as back-stairs head devil of the Tribune; and deeming it his duty to enlighten the State at large as to the labours of their Representatives, wrote a semi-official letter, and published it over his name, coolly alleging that Strang, the Mormon Prophet, was the Autocrat of the Democratic party, and that the Free Press clique were his most supple tools, doing his bidding, and trembling at his nod. In short, that Strang was the hardest kind of a hard shell, and every man among them looking to him, like young robins to the old for titbits of grubs.

And at the same time every man in Lansing knew that Mr. Strang did not so much as attend the caucuses, having his hands more than full with the pressing business of his constituents, and his duties on committees, and that the Lansing correspondence of the Free Press was attacking him daily in most gross language, accusing him of abandoning the Democrats and going over to Abolitionism.

We have seldom seen a reason for this practice of the Tribune, but now the reason is clear. If the Tribune can really establish that Mr. Peck is the friend of the Mormons, some five hundred votes will be lost to him at the next election. But what if they all take the Tribune by contraries, as all do who know it?

Sleighs are continually passing between here and La Croix, Middletown and Arbour Croche, going around by the White Shoals. The Lake is nearly all open between here and Wau-go-shance.

The fall of snow is exceedingly small, and makes very little water. If this should be the case generally, the Lakes will fall next summer.

The prospect for an early opening could not be better. The field of ice is very large, but very few icebergs appear, and the quantity beached is unusually small.

A bookbinder, who can do substantial work, in all styles, from plain to rich, will find constant employment at this place. One job of two thousand volumes, and several smaller ones, will be waiting and in a great hurry, at the opening of navigation. A gentleman of family, who would settle for a permanent business, would be preferred. Entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks, on all occasions, and unexceptionable morals, would be indispensable qualifications.

Three or four good boatbuilders, able to carry on a yard on their own account, would be pressed for more work than they could do.

Six or eight journeymen coopers would find constant employ, at good prices.

A house, boat, sign and ornamental painter is greatly needed here.

Three or four "jour" printers, of unexceptionable habits, can have constant employment here, at book and news work, the coming summer.

There is such a lack of qualified school teachers here as to make it really difficult keeping our schools in operation.

A baker and provisioner would find this place a most eligible location.

Who will come here and build a gristmill? There is only one small one here, and that is much the same as none. Numerous hand-mills are in requisition, for want of other facilities.

If some man would set up a cedar pail and tub factory, he could sell his productions at his door faster than he could finish them.

A wooden dish mill would give profitable employ to several hands.

Two men, good workmen at chairs, would get more orders, accompanied with the cash, than they could fill.

One bedstead maker would be equally fortunate in locating here.

A good brickmaker could find ready sales for several kilns of brick annually. Brick are now brought from Milwaukee here, and cost ten dollars per thousand. But we have as good claybanks as there are at Milwaukee, and the wood can be had for the chopping.

Three or four brick and stone masons and plasterers would find constant employment, at good prices.

It is so difficult to get joiners, that several persons have been obliged to postpone building, from the impossibility of getting the work done.

At this time there is not a single vessel owned at this place, where the trade is sufficient to employ three or four. There are men here able and disposed to purchase or build, if they could get reliable and trustworthy sailors to take charge of them.

The Lansing Republican says:

"We are also authorized by Hon. C. P. Bush to say that the statement of the Islander relative to the purchase of the Pine River property by Bush & Wadsworth, is false. Mr. Strang's 'private papers' were not examined, and his selections 'hunted out' by Wadsworth. Mr. Wadsworth's minutes were taken before leaving Grand Traverse, and the property was purchased in pursuance of a previous engagement between him and Bush. Nor was Mr. Strang offered 'one third the purchase at five times the entire cost.' Mr. Bush assures us he was not 'offered the purchase' or any portion of it at all, but that he [Strang] did apply to Bush for an interest in the property and was refused."

We are glad to see Mr. Bush put his foot in. Now we have on file, in the Islander Office, a correspondence on this subject, between Mr. Strang and A. S. Wadsworth, Esq., Bush's partner, in which Wadsworth admits that he did enter Mr. Strang's private room, at the Benton House, turn over his private papers, and look at his draught of the Pine River lands, and observe his selections marked.

Wadsworth defends himself, not with Bush, by denying the fact, but denying the intention; and to prove his innocence, states that he purchased a portion of the land on his way to Lansing, before he could have had any knowledge of Mr. Strang's selections.

Mr. Strang, in reply, produced the certificate of the Register of the Land Office at Ionia, that all the lands were purchased at one time, and at a date subsequent to the arrival of Wadsworth at Lansing.

Upon this, Wadsworth becomes rabid; threatens to compare character with the Mormons; says he don't wish to set up his friends to mob them, if they let him alone; but that he did deposit the money for part of his purchase at the Land Office, on his way to Lansing, though the duplicates all bore the subsequent date, of Feb. 14th, 1853.

We shall send this to Mr. Bush, and circulate it pretty freely in his neighbourhood. Possibly he may authorize the State Librarian to say something else. But he will be very likely to remember the saying of Job, "Oh that mine enemy had written a book." We shall be surprised if the Republican gets anything with his name to it. He is shrewder in prevarication than his partner, Wadsworth.

But if he will take up this controversy, over his own name, in either of the papers in Lansing, we will prove him a liar by such a flood of evidence as shall command the unanimous verdict of his townsmen against him. We only want to see C. P. Bush assert, over his own signature, what the Republican asserts in his behalf, and the issue is made. As the Republican can spare very little room to the discussion of one side of this question, if Mr. Leech will furnish us with a copy of his subscription list, we will send the Islander to his subscribers gratuitous, till he and Mr. Bush are perfectly content to get out of the discussion by dignified silence.

The Islander admits that "considerable quantities of Dixon's property has been stolen," but does not tell us where it has probably gone, nor does it even deny that it was taken by Mormons. It says, "those who are not blind past all cure will not be at a loss who to suspect, though they may have some difficulty in making proof;" an opinion in which we most fully coincide.—Lansing Republican.

The Islander does not admit any such thing. It neither admits or denies that of which it knows nothing. It merely brings together facts and rumours, and expresses its opinion on them.

In saying that the Islander does not "even deny that it was taken by the Mormons," it, in effect, affirms that we admitted it. So utterly false is this, that we showed circumstantially, step by step, that there was not the slightest reason to suspect the Mormons.

We showed that such of Dixon's property as was really exposed to Mormon depredations, and would have been of any value to them, remained untouched, and that which would be worthless to them, and was scarcely within their reach, was the only property taken. We showed that there was a people in this country in deadly hostility to the Mormons, among whom stealing under certain circumstances was not disgraceful; and that they had a deep interest beyond the mere temptation of gain, in stealing from Dixon; and, finally, that all the property stolen from there which had been traced one step, had gone in the direction of Grand Traverse, where the Mormons do not live, but their persecutors do.

And because, after showing all this, we did not add that no one of the seven thousand Mormons in these parts had any share in the stealing, (a thing of which we could not know anything,) the Republican gravely tells its readers in substance that we admitted it.

Keep on, Mr. Leech. When you have convinced your readers that the fourth of what you say is true, they will begin to inquire what our Republican Legislature were about that Courts are not organized to try these men of the borders.

Simpletons, like yourself, and him of the Herald, who have been inquiring why King Strang did not punish men for various crimes committed within the boundaries and jurisdiction of the "sovereign State of Michigan," will perhaps inquire why Gov. Bingham does not marshal his forces in all the panoply of war, and come up and exterminate us? If we thought he would do it, we should feel very bad. But—we'll take our chance. The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Saints. If you sow us, we shall grow a crop. You have little idea how big a field we should seed.

HOOPS.

Do the ladies of Saint James know that hoops are in fashion as female wardrobe? If they do not, they are greatly behind the times. To those who have itching eyes for Gentile customs, we suggest that they make speed, or they will be too late. Hoops, eighteen feet in circumference, are worn by the ladies. Who will be first in this fashionable city to put them on?

Don't be frightened. Your grand mothers, or at least your great grand mothers, all wore them. Why have they been out of fashion so long? Lean over this way, and we will tell you; close. There, that will do. "The Queens of France have had no babies. That is all the reason."

"You know the Empress Eugenia is interesting; out at interest, we suppose that means. At least there is a prospect of an increase of both principal and interest. So she puts on hoops; and all the thin ladies at Court put them on."

"The ladies at Court appear in hoops, and all Paris has them on. Since Paris is hooped, our fashionable ladies wear hoops; why, we must all wear them; because we might as well be out of the world, as out of fashion."

Eugenia is young, with fair prospects before her. Hoops are likely to come and go like changes in the cut of the sleeves, for a few years to come. The price of whalebone has risen on the prospect. Ratan is coming into market again, for the relief of poorer ladies. New experiments are made on the qualities of gutta percha; blackash is suffering; and old ladies, who hate changes, wonder why Louis Napoleon could not have married a woman of his own age, and spared them the use of hoops. What a tyrant fashion is. How inexorable.

The Lansing Republican gives our reply to its onslaught a very brief notice, giving as a reason for not republishing it, that it has not room for a fourteen column article.

The Republican's attack on us makes one column bourgeois, and our reply two columns pica, or less than one bourgeois. The reply is shorter than the attack.

Perhaps the State Librarian is not guilty of falsehood, because, including four other attacks on us, and our reply to all, we made up an article of near fourteen columns.

A sad thing, this want of room. Capt. Stansbury and Lieut. Gunnison, of the U. S. Engineer service, Col. Kane, of the army, and Derby & Miller, have published histories of Mormonism. Thos. Ford, late Governor of Illinois, in his history of that State, gives their history while there. Howe's history of Ohio, published by authority, and furnished to every school district in the State, covers their sojourn there. All these writers vindicate them as a moral people, much more sinned against than sinning. The Republican never found room for a line from one of these works; but when a worn out prostitute, from a house of ill fame in Saint Louis, got out a novel, entitled "Female Life among the Mormons," the Republican devours the book as veritable history.

"FEMALE LIFE AMONG THE MORMONS—a narrative of many years personal experience, by the wife of a Mormon Elder, recently from Utah."

This is an octavo of 450 pages, got up in good mechanical style, by J. C. Derby, New York, and had a very extensive sale last summer, besides being reprinted in numerous newspapers. Though evidently written as a novel, that fact is not directly stated. It has generally been advertised, reprinted and read as veritable history. We do not doubt that 100,000 people have read it, believing not only that it was written as history, but that it was really such.

The author's name is not given. The Book was very generally announced through the press, as by a runaway wife of Brigham Young. She gives herself out in the book as the Gentile wife of a Mormon Elder. Whoever she may be, nearly every page of the book bears the most conclusive evidence that she never lived among the Mormons, and is remarkably ignorant, both of their faith, and their history.

But two persons are mentioned from the beginning of the book to the end who have ever been known among the Mormons; Smith and Young. All the rest of the characters are fictitious, as is every scene from the first page to the last. Not the slightest attention is paid to the best known facts in history, facts never questioned. The disregard of facts goes far beyond malice. It exhibits gross ignorance.

For instance, Mormonism began near Palmyra, New York. The author makes the vicinity of Utica its natal place. The companies gathered up there went to Kirtland, Ohio. The author takes them into the interior of Illinois, to some place which has not acquired a name.

The bank which Joseph Smith and his associates established in Ohio, she also locates at some nameless place in Illinois. The book, from beginning to end, ignores the building of Kirtland, and the Temple, and the entire sojourn of the Mormons in Ohio. It makes not the slightest mention of the settlement of four or five thousand Mormons in Jackson county, Missouri, and their expulsion from there by an armed mob, in 1833. It never alludes to the subsequent settlement of 10,000 of them on the north side of the Missouri, and their banishment under the orders of Gov. Lillburn W. Boggs.

One would naturally think that a transaction in which an entire religious denomination, 10,000 in number, were banished from a State, and their property, to the amount of three millions of dollars, confiscated under the authority of the State government, was an event of as much consequence in history and in female life as the wetting of a pasteboard bonnet on a long journey; p. 168.

But the author, though she set out at the first start and has gone the grand rounds of Mormonism, forgets her starting place; forgets the first stop at Kirtland; forgets the long journey to Independence, Missouri; has no recollection of the persecution in which some fifty were killed, and several thousand banished; don't know whether, with Smith, she went back to Kirtland, and after some years returned to Far West, or went directly there.

She makes not the slightest allusion to the long persecution, frequent martyrdoms, severe and protracted imprisonment, and final and entire banishment of the Mormons from Missouri. Some how she gets direct from the wrong place in New York to the wrong place in Illinois; and instead of finding Nauvoo the most wealthy and populous and best built city in the State of Illinois, as many thousands found it, she discovered "the Mormon village, containing about fifty houses, and every house could number two or three families," of every grade, from common log houses to the meanest hovels, without floors or chimneys, doors or windows, and deliberately asserts that "there was but one needle in the village;" p. 82; "no oven, two churns, three washtubs and one tin baker;" p. 83.

We beg the reader's pardon. We did not know, when commencing this review, that the book so utterly outraged truth and sense. A book from a respectable and flourishing publishing house, copied and recommended by numerous very respectable, truth telling newspapers, including the Lansing Republican, generally read and as generally believed, telling us that in a city of 17,000 inhabitants there was but one needle, and on account of the scarcity of thread, that was seldom in use.

This book makes the murder of Smith to have taken place while on horseback, running away with a woman he had rescued from jail; shot by a man by the name of Clark, from New York, instead of according to the fact, killed in jail by a mob of two or three hundred persons; disguised with their faces blackened, as every writer has stated.

Col. Walker, a filibuster, that is, a Yankee robber, has obtained possession of one of the Central American States, erected a government, and sent Col. French as minister to Washington. Ostensibly he is not received, but he has the sympathy of many leading Americans, including members of the government. There is little doubt the movement is for the extension of Anglo-American Republicanism, and is secretly fostered by Mr. Pierce's administration.

Col. Kinney, late from Corpus Christi, Texas, is on the Gulf coast of Central America, engaged in a similar labour of love, with some prospect of success.

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY.

The Detroit Tribune has made the discovery that the Hon. G. W. Peck represents in Congress Mr. Strang's wives. Doubtless he has the largest constituency of the four Michigan members, but we were not aware that that honour was undivided. It had been supposed that the Hon. Daniel Wells, of Milwaukee, represented a portion of the family. How is that, Mr. Barnes? Is Mr. Peck the representative of more than one district? The wives are anxious to know who represents them.

The Lansing Republican says, "Mr. Strang will not reiterate his charges in presence of Mr. Bush." We do not know as Mr. Strang has made any charges; but if the Republican means that he will not affirm what we have stated, Mr. Bush can have the opportunity of trying it on, before a year is gone.

If he has not "written a book," his partner has, and Mr. Strang "kept the documents," and will be perfectly ready, both to make the proof, and to be knocked down—the common defence of those who are both accused and proved guilty of falsehood.

A DISCOVERY IN GEOGRAPHY.

The Lansing Republican, last summer, republished several chapters of a novel entitled "Female Life among the Mormons," recommending it as veritable history. At page 282 this work names Michigan as one of the "States" from which the Mormons went up to Utah, and on page 288 names "Beaver Island" as another State which furnished its tribe. The people of Michigan ought to be proud of the erudition of their Librarian.

David R. Atchison, the creator of the Kansas frits, was an active leader in the war in which the Mormons were expelled from Missouri. One of the Missouri papers, we believe the Saint Louis Democrat, says, many of them "boast of having taken a part in the Illinois Mormon war, in which they bravely attacked two prisoners in jail, and killed them," besides burning some hundred houses, and driving off a great quantity of cattle. Brave men they.

HORRIBLE DESTRUCTION AMONG THE INDIANS.—The Bois Forte Indians, living on the north shore of Lake Superior, were driven to such straits last year that they ate their own children almost to extermination. Their usual food is wild rice, which grows in great abundance where they are. Our Government Agent, G. D. Williams, of Sault Ste. Marie, was recently there to pay off 700 Chippewas near the Grand Portage, and conversed with two women of the tribe, one of whom had given up two and the other three children, successively, to be slain and eaten.

INDIAN MASSACRE.

We find the following in the Salt Lake News of the 10th of October: "On the 22d September, a Utah Indian asked a Mormon, named James Wiseman Hunt, to go with him from the fort to the herd, a short distance off, to see a horse that Hunt had bought of him. They started, the Indian on horseback and Hunt afoot, and when about a mile from the fort, the Indian directed Hunt's attention to the cattle, a little way off from the horses, and while he was turned, shot him in the back, the ball ranging down diagonally and lodging in the thigh. One of the herdsmen close by started to give the alarm, and the other one drove the herd on to the fort. In a short time several of the brethren went to bring in Hunt, and when about half way back, the Indians fired upon them, wounding Prest. A. N. Billings in the fore finger of the right hand. Three or four of the party fell a few paces in the rear, and by occasionally firing upon the pursuers, they all succeeded in reaching the fort without further loss or injury. Brother Hunt lingered about thirteen hours and died.

Within an hour and a half after their return, some Indians on the bluff near by told the men in the fort that they would kill the two men who had previously gone out and were then returning, and immediately fired seven rounds, killing, as they afterwards stated, brothers William Behuin and Edward Edwards, the two who were out. During the same day the Indians burned the hay, and turned off the water that supplied the fort. At daylight the next morning, the Indians began to gather round in great numbers, and there being no prospect of a speedy reconciliation, the remaining thirteen brethren, by the advice of friendly Indians, took their horses and started for Manti, leaving their enemies quarreling over the cattle and spoils in the fort."

WOMEN.

In a recent sermon, Theodore Parker uttered the following, touching women:—"There are three classes of women: First, domestic drudges, who are wholly taken up in the material details of their housekeeping and childkeeping. Their housekeeping is a trade and no more; and after they have done that, there is no more which they can do. In New England it is a small class, getting less each year.

Next are the domestick dolls, wholly taken up with the vain show which delights the eye and ear. They are ornaments of the estate. Similar toys, I suppose, will one day be more cheaply manufactured at Paris, at Nuremberg, at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and other toyshops in Europe, out of wax or papier mache, and sold in Boston at the haberdasher's by the dozen. These ask nothing beyond their functions as dolls, and hate all attempts to elevate womankind.

But there are domestick women, who order a house and are not mere drudges, adorn it and are not mere dolls, but women. Some of these—a great many of them—conjoin the useful of the drudge and the beautiful of the doll into one womanhood, and have a great deal left besides. They are wholly taken up with their functions as housekeeper, wife and mother."

SUGAR FROM HONEY DEW.—In Utah a great quantity of sugar is made from the honey dew which collects on the leaves of cottonwood. The leaves are soaked in water, after which precisely the same course is pursued as in the manufacture of maple sugar.

INDIAN FREE STATE MEN IN KANSAS.—During the late difficulties in Kansas, a large number of Shawnee and Delaware Indians expressed their willingness to join the fight under the banner of the free State men.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD.

1. At every Temple, which thou shalt build unto the Lord thy God, by his Commandment, shalt thou make a fountain for the baptism of the living for the dead.

1. A special dispensation was given to baptize for the dead at Nauvoo, in 1842, and the waters of the Mississippi, in front of the city, sanctified for that purpose, until a place for baptism should be prepared in the Temple. (D. & C., ciii, 10.)

2. Such a place was made in the Temple, but in the rejection of Nauvoo as a holy city, the baptisms there administered were rejected, and the dispensation forfeited. (D. & C., ciii, 11, 13, 14.) The rejection took place at the time of the exodus from Nauvoo, subsequent to which all baptisms were invalid.

3. Those baptisms, administered down till that time, were valid, when done by competent authority. But those who were baptized, if they followed leaders whom God did not call, were also rejected, with their dead; which leaves the dead without saviours; and yet dependent, on the charity of the living. (Mal. iv, 6.)

4. The records of those baptisms were never set in order in the Temple, and are lost. It is necessary, where the baptisms are valid, that due proof be made before a Recorder, and the baptisms recorded anew. In cases of rejected and invalid baptisms, the rightful representatives should be baptized, as though it had not been done.

5. A dispensation to baptize for the dead at Voree was given August 9th, 1849, and the waters of White River sanctified for that purpose.

6. A dispensation was given to baptize for the dead at Saint James, during the session of the General Conference, in 1855, and Fount Lake sanctified for that purpose.

2. And for these shall you be baptized: every one of you, according to your several rights, and in your several orders, according to consanguinity, sex, and primogeniture, shall be baptized for any deceased husband, wife, or posterity; or any progenitor, to the third and fourth generation; or any brother, or sister, whom he in faith believes has received the gospel in the spirit.

3. Thou shalt also be baptized for any relative, within the fourth degree of consanguinity; for any one betrothed to thee in marriage; for thy fosterfather, mother, brother, sister, or child, whom I shall give to thee by tongue, dream, vision, spirit ministering in fire, word of angel, or by my own voice.

Degrees of consanguinity are ascertained by counting each generation, up to the common ancestor, and down from him.

4. And whosoever I will that any of my faithful servants of the Aaronick Priesthood be baptized for any other, I will send my angels to signify it unto them. But unto my servants of the Melchisedek Priesthood, I will speak by my own voice, or minister in fire.

1. When the candidate claims baptism for the dead by revelation, in any form whatever, the Administrator should inquire and judge of the validity of the claim, and the Recorder should briefly state the revelation in the record.

2. Care should be taken that this record is sufficient in substance; otherwise the baptism may be set aside as invalid.

5. But no man or woman among you shall be baptized for the dead, who is not a member of some family, according to the order of the Church of the Firstborn of God; or who is under condemnation of any word of this Law; or who withholdeth anything whatsoever from the treasury of the House of the Lord your God.

1. Baptism for the dead is an ordinance of the Temple, and it is only by special dispensation, in consequence of the poverty of the Saints, that it is ever administered out of a Temple. Hence those who withhold of the funds due for the construction of the Temple, are refused baptism for the dead.

2. Those who are under condemnation for disobedience to any word of this Law of God, whether it be a Commandment, a statute, a precept, or whatsoever word it may be, are unfit for saviours of others, because they are not themselves in a state of salvation, nor even progressing forward towards it.

3. But those who are not regular members of any family, duly organized, have no place to bring those for whom they shall be baptized; they have no home for them to abide in, in the everlasting life. The chief thing in the salvation promised in the gospel, is in the family relation, and love, of a holy people. They who lack that relationship, are unsaved themselves, unprepared to save others.

6. At every Temple which ye shall build unto the Lord your God, shall High Priests be set apart, and sanctified by anointing with holy oil, and the hands of Apostles and Prophets, to baptize for the dead; for no other shall administer this sacrament.

The Chief Shepherd and Counsellors in the Presidency baptize for the dead without being set apart to that calling.

7. Recorders, also, shall be set apart by the laying on of hands of High Priests, to record baptisms for the dead; who shall be eye-witnesses to the baptisms, and shall record according to the seeing of their eyes.

8. And other witnesses, who see with their eyes, shall sign the records of baptisms, that every one may be proved by the testimony of two or three witnesses.

9. But there shall be one record before the King, unto which all records of baptisms for the dead shall be brought, and all written together in perpetual archives; that what you record on earth, may also be recorded in heaven. At every Temple also shall ye perpetuate the record of such as are there baptized.

NOTE ON BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD.

1. To millions of mankind the gospel was never preached in life. If it is not to be preached to them in another state of being, then the salvation which the gospel promises is not offered to them. And if the gospel is not preached to them at any time, then they are denied the possibility of entering into life.

2. Many Christians, unwilling to admit that salvation was not offered to all men, have asserted that those to whom the gospel was not preached were saved, on the general ground that as they did not know the Law of God, they were not under condemnation for breaking it.

3. Admitting this to be true, the consequence would be that ignorance of the gospel was as pleasing to God as obedience; and the just conclusion would be, that the gospel was not revealed to save men, but as an excuse for damning them. For, if all who are ignorant of the gospel are to be saved, universal ignorance would have produced universal bliss.

4. If they fall back on the old Christian faith of the Fathers, that there is no salvation without obedience to the gospel, then without preaching to and baptism for the dead, those to whom the gospel was never preached may justly claim that they were lost; not because they would not obey, but because they could not hear.

5. If, to avoid both horns of this dilemma, the Christian shall say that the sincere and well-meaning of every nation will be saved, whatever his religious faith, then they are not saved by the gospel, but by their own righteousness; not by obedience to the word of God, but by integrity to the institutions of their several countries and nations.

6. God, having established the rule that all shall be destroyed who obey not the Law of the gospel, (2d Thess. i, 8, ii, 12. Rev. xxii, 14. Mark xvi, 16,) has provided for the preaching of the gospel to the spirits in prison, (1st Peter iii, 19, iv, 6. Luke xxiii, 43,) and the baptism for the dead, (1st Cor. xv, 29,) that salvation may be offered to all men, and only those lost who take pleasure in unrighteousness. (Matt. iii, 10.)

7. When Jesus had finished his testimony on earth, and offered himself for the sins of men, he went in the spirit and preached to the spirits in prison, (1st Pet. iii, 19, 20,) and opened unto them a dispensation of the gospel, before he ascended to heaven. (John xx, 17.)

8. The dispensation being opened, and he having, by a stainless life, and a sacrifice of himself for the salvation of others, become worthy of the keys of the resurrection and everlasting life, ascended to heaven, received all power, and sat down at the right hand of God.

9. Those who become partakers of the same calling with him, as they leave their ministry on earth, go to minister among the spirits of the dead; that they, by obedience to the gospel, may be saved, as are the living.

CONFIRMATION.

1. EXCEPT a man be born of the spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

1. The birth of the spirit is fully illustrated by Jesus, in his discourse with Nicodemus. Assuming that a ruler of the Jews could not be ignorant what a birth of water was, he seizes upon a familiar illustration of the other, to which the dry hot climate of that country gave peculiar force.

2. The severity of climate in that country is not in its wintry frosts, but its summer heats; so that the coming of the blessed is compared to the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. (Isa. xxxii, 2.)

3. Passing over the parched plains, under a cloudless sky, with the sun's rays pouring down like the blast of a furnace, when the traveller is ready to perish, suddenly he hears a sound of wind. Immediately it sweeps past. The cooling breeze comes upon him. His lungs are inflated, and his strength renewed. He feels himself another man. So is every one that is born of the spirit. (John iii, 8.)

4. A more splendid exhibition of this power occurred at Jerusalem, at the first Pentecost after the ascension, when the outpouring of the spirit was so abundant that those present spoke in tongues, and every one understood in his own language. (Acts ii, 1-11.)

2. Whosoever shall be baptized for the remission of sins, upon him shall the Apostles, High Priests, or Elders, lay their hands, and confirm him in the Kingdom, and give unto him, by their hands, a gift of the Holy Spirit, according as the spirit will.

It cannot be expected that every one who receives the laying on of hands, will receive with it a powerful and overwhelming inspiration. But he will receive a spirit of truth sufficient, if cherished, to guide him into all truth, and make him wise in the things of God's Kingdom. Such should avoid looking for marvels, and be content with substantial wisdom and enduring knowledge.

3. And the spirit thus given shall inspire him with faith, intelligence, and understanding; and if he cherish it, then shall it guide and establish him in all righteousness.

1. It is a mistake to suppose any one will possess all the spiritual gifts, who has the laying on of hands, or that he will have any particular one he may choose. The spirit divideth gifts severally, as he will. (1st Cor. xii, 11.)

2. Paul enumerates the gifts of the spirit, as wisdom, knowledge, faith, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, and the interpretation. (1st Cor. xii, 8-10.) Of these every servant of God, obedient in faith, repentance, and baptism, will, by the laying on of hands, receive his portion, sufficient to guide him to life, if he will follow its inspiration.

4. For when they lay their hands upon him, the spirit, like an invigorating breeze, shall come upon him and cover him; and it shall inspire him with a new power, according to the gifts of the spirit; and as it passeth off and leaveth him, his gift shall continue, and he shall walk in newness of life.

NOTE ON SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

1. When Jesus sent his Apostles to preach to the nations of the earth, he commanded them, "go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature: he that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; (with impunity;) and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." (Matt. xvi, 15-18.)

2. This promise, as broad as the earth, and as long as time, just as much assures signs as salvation. The believers of the gospel which the Apostles were sent to preach, are as certain that signs will follow them, as that they will be saved.

3. It makes a simple issue of veracity between the Lord Jesus Christ, and all those sects who say the signs do not follow. Inquire of any Christian sect if the signs follow them. As oft as they say they do not, so often be assured, on the oath of Jesus Christ, that they do not believe the gospel.

4. But the signs do not go before unbelievers. They are not given to beget faith in their minds, but to benefit the faithful.

PREDICTIONS OF THE EMPEROR NICHOLAS.

The Indianapolis Journal gives the following extract from a lecture, given by the Hon. H. W. Ellsworth, late Minister to Sweden, being the language of the late Emperor of Russia, used in an interview with the lecturer: "Sir," said the Emperor Nicholas, in a memorable diplomatic interview between him and your speaker, during those recent revolutions which struck down Hungary, remodeled France, and broke the bone of union between Denmark and her revolted Duchies, causing nearly every monarch to tremble for his throne—"Sir, I view calmly all this agitation. Russia is untouched, and will not be mingled with it. Her hour has not yet come, though her destiny cannot be long delayed! She will soon be involved in a protracted contest, in which England and France will be her opponents; those nations, so long and so naturally hostile to each other, will be arrayed in unison against her!"

"And what, your Majesty, will be the result of this great contest?"

"Favourable, beyond doubt, to Russia. I shall rise superior to all reverses, and protract the contest till I weary out my enemies. But there is another war looming in the distance—a struggle between Constitutional and unrestrained monarchy, in which nearly all Europe will stand opposed to Russia, while Turkey, her natural enemy, with Persia, and Asia, will be fighting at her side."

"And how is to result this second conflict?"

"Still favourable to Russia, though it will be bloody and protracted. But a third, and still mightier contest is approaching, in which the world will be involved—a struggle between what is called tyranny, in any form, and freedom. Into this struggle your nation will be forced from its present policy, and compelled to take a leading part. It will be a struggle such as history never has recorded."

CALENDAR FOR 1856.

	SUNDAY.	MONDAY.	TUESDAY.	WEDNESDAY.	THURSDAY.	FRIDAY.	SATURDAY.
JAN.	6	7	8	9	10	11	12
FEB.	13	14	15	16	17	18	19
MARCH.	20	21	22	23	24	25	26
APRIL.	27	28	29	30	31
MAY.	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
JUNE.	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
JULY.	17	18	19	20	21	22	23
AUG.	24	25	26	27	28	29	30
SEPT.	31
OCT.	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
NOV.	8	9	10	11	12	13	14
DEC.	15	16	17	18	19	20	21
	22	23	24	25	26	27	28
	29	30	31

METEOROLOGY.

The opening of winter was spoken of as severe. But for a month past the season has been remarkably favourable for business. There is nearly a foot of snow in the woods, and a good bed in the roads everywhere. The weather is so very fine that little remark is made of the cold.

Compared with former years, December and January range as follows:

	1855.	1854.	1853.	1852.	1850.
DECEMBER.
Coldest day,	3.66	4.66	13.66	11.87	15.00
" obs,	2.00	1.00	10.00	6.00	10.00
Warmest day,	44.66	39.66	40.16	41.50	33.50
" obs,	46.00	42.00	45.00	44.50	38.00
Mean at 7, a. m.,	22.88	22.75	25.31
" 3, p. m.,	25.53	25.85	27.52
" 9, p. m.,	21.98	23.09	25.41
Monthly mean,	23.48	23.86	26.05	25.42	27.02

	1856.	1855.	1854.	1853.	1851.
JANUARY.
Coldest day,	-8.00	4.66	3.00	9.50	2.75
" obs,	-9.00	1.00	-1.00	7.00	1.00
Warmest day,	29.33	50.33	34.00	37.50	38.25
" obs,	38.00	53.00	38.00	40.00	43.00
Mean at 7, a. m.,	8.49	19.67	14.74
" 3, p. m.,	19.10	24.83	18.39
" 9, p. m.,	12.04	22.51	16.09
Monthly mean,	13.28	22.76	16.41	26.76	29.46

Thus December is only four and a half degrees colder than the warmest December, that of 1850; but January is sixteen degrees colder than January, 1851, and two degrees colder than 1854.

It will strike every one with surprise that the difference between this and previous winters is so small, this having been spoken of as an uncommonly severe winter. We can only account for it by this: that people are now much better housed than formerly, and therefore more sensible to cold; and the further fact that the Island is more opened, and therefore winds are more felt.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. VI.—NO. 3.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1856.

WHOLE NO. 86.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise regularly. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

BEAUTIFUL DOCTRINE.

The Rev. Dr. Bellows, of New York, recently delivered an excellent address on birth, in the course of which he remarks:

"For my part, I say in all solemnity, I have become sincerely suspicious of the piety of those who do not love pleasure in any form. I cannot trust the man that never laughs; that is always sedate; that has no apparent outlets for those natural springs of sportiveness and gaiety that are perennial in the human soul. I knew that nature takes her revenge on such violence. I expect to find secret vices, malignant sins, or horrid crimes springing up in this hot-bed of confined air and imprisoned space; and, therefore, it gives me a sincere moral gratification anywhere and in any community, to see innocent pleasures and popular amusements resisting the religious bigotry that grows so unwisely upon them. Anything is better than dark, dead, unhappy social life—pry to crime and morbid excitement, which results from unmitigated puritanism, whose second crop is usually unbridled licence and infamous folly."

THE CHARACTER OF THE TURK.

The character of the Turk is like his own beloved Stamboul—a mass of singular incongruities. There is scarcely one feature of a meek or gorgeous beauty that is not approached by some counteracting deformity. He loves and venerates his mother, and strangles his wife upon a whisper of jealousy.

He tolerates you in the exercise of your religion, and bowsstrings a convert from his own; he is magnanimous in the forgiveness of one enemy, and implacable in the persecution of another equally deserving his generosity; he loves his children when young and forgets them when they have grown up. He relieves a stranger in distress, and turns a deaf ear to a brother in misfortune; he washes his hands, kneels, and prays, and then, like Pilate, delivers up the innocent.

He plunders a province, and then goes on a pious pilgrimage to Mecca; he liberates a caged bird, and dungeons a human being; he is honest and upright in the bazaar, and a deep dissimbler in the divan; he is a republican in private life, and a despot in power; submissive to those above him, and arbitrary to those beneath; he kisses his death sentence, and charges his very bones to rumble their remonstrance in the grave.

He is temperate in the indulgence of his appetites, and yet lives mainly for gratification; he believes in destiny, and yet beheads a general who has lost a battle, or an admiral who has been driven by a tempest on the rocks.

He prides himself on the stateliness of his person, the dignity of his carriage, the taciturnity of his lips, and then goes to the deformity of a natural cripple for medical council.

PRIESTHOOD.

1. THERE are two Priesthoods: the Priesthood of an endless life; and the Priesthood of life.

The Priesthood of an endless life is commonly called the Melchisedek Priesthood, or the Priesthood after the order of Melchisedek, in honour of Melchisedek, who blessed Abraham, and received tithes of him. Before his time it was called the Priesthood of the Sons of God; because those who hold this Priesthood are Sons of God.

2. In the Priesthood of an endless life are two Orders; that of Apostles, and of Priests.

3. Of Apostles there are four Degrees.

4. The first Degree is that of Lawgiver, and is Apostle, Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator. This Degree is sole, and gives the word of God as from his own mouth.

1. There is no word in language which properly expresses the varied duties of this Priesthood. It is the greatness of the everlasting Priesthood; and has all the gifts, and all the keys conferred on man. It is so full of itself that it carries the Church of God with it, and can both institute and act in place of every other Priesthood.

2. This Degree is only necessary for the establishment of the rest of God, and bringing in of everlasting righteousness on earth. A less degree of Priesthood has frequently stood at the head of the people of God on earth.

3. Enoch was called to this Priesthood, and, being faithful himself, but failing to redeem the earth, was translated. (Gen. v. 24.) And it seems that many who followed him were translated with him. (Jasher iii. 27—38. D. & C. xii. 1.)

4. Moses was called to the same Priesthood, and down to the time of receiving the Law of the Tables was engaged in the great work of making Israel a holy nation; a peculiar treasure above all people; a Kingdom of Priests. (Ex. xix. 5, 6.) By this exalted Priesthood he was enabled to know the incommunicable name of God, which even Abraham did not know. (Gen. xii. 8.)

5. As the Lawgiver turned from God to self worship, they were cut off from the rest of God, and were only saved from an entire destruction by coming into an individual dispensation, on the intercession of Moses. (Ex. xxxii. 7—14, 31—35.)

6. Hence, on the removal of Moses from his earthly ministry, this holy Priesthood was taken away with him. (D. & C. iv. 4.) and only a portion of the honour of Moses was put on Joshua, who succeeded him in the government of Israel. (Num. xxi. 14, 29.)

7. Jesus Christ held this Priesthood, and was succeeded successively by Peter, James and John. John was the last Revelator in that dispensation. It is apparent that their authority was not equal to that held by him, though they held the keys of mysteries and revelations. For after his time no attempt appears to have been made to restore the Kingdom to Israel. Indeed, they were not of the proper lineage to bring about the restoration, not inheriting the promise.

8. The present dispensation was the necessary sequence of that which was of the preceding. Not only had the prophecy gone before that the Shepherd and Stone of Israel should come of Joseph, (Gen. xlix. 24. Ante p. 172. Note ii.) but that the house of David should be re-established on the throne of Israel. (Isa. liii. 1—5. Jer. xxxiii. 17. Zech. iii. 8.)

9. In the last dispensation the work of the gathering of the Gentiles and establishing the Kingdom of God could only be accomplished by the heir of David. (Ante p. 172. Note iii.) This was not only secured to David by God's covenant with him, but it was sealed to the tribe of Judah by Jacob. (Gen. xlix. 10—12.)

10. An objection is sometimes made to a dispensation of the Kingdom, and the Law of God in the last days, because of the saying, "in those ye shall have no King, nor ruler; for I will be your King, and watch over you;" and ye shall have no Law, but my Law, when I come, for I am your Lawgiver." (D. & C. xli. 5.) So far from showing that a dispensation of the Law of God will not be given, this text expressly shows that it will, and that none will have power to administer the Law, but such as are sent in the name of Christ; and that his Law shall so far prevail, that when the time of his coming arrives, his people will be subject to no Law but his.

11. Jacob began his blessing on Judah by saying, "Thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise. Thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies. Thy father's children shall bow down before thee." His dominion over the brethren is signified by having his hand in their necks. Over his brethren, by their bowing down before him. And the reason of this superiority is in that superior adhesion to the covenants of God, which secured the praise of his brethren. (Gen. xlix. 8.)

12. Lest Judah should mistake the import of this language, and commence immediately to rule his brethren, in derogation of the power which Joseph held by revelation, (Gen. xxxvii. 5—10.) he next distinguished him as a lion's whelp; that is, an heir of royalty, though strong as a lion, the true symbol of royalty. (Gen. xlix. 9.)

13. But fixing with greater exactness what was already stated, that he was speaking of what should befall Israel "in the last days," (Gen. xlix. 1.) Jacob goes on to say, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." (Id. 10.)

14. This language has evident reference to the birth of a Lawgiver, of the line of Judah, and not to the loss of the sceptre by the house of David. The style of speech aptly describes a birth, and its appropriate office is to inform Judah that though he was to hold the Kingly office, it was not till the last days.

15. With this interpretation agrees all sacred history. Within a few generations Moses was raised up a Lawgiver, though of the tribe of Levi, and was succeeded in the leadership of Israel by Joshua, of the tribe of Ephraim. (Num. xii. 8.)

16. Among the Rulers of Israel after him were Tola, of the tribe of Issachar. (Jud. x. 1.) Elon, of the tribe of Zebulun. (Jud. xii. 11.) Samson, of the tribe of Dan. (Jud. xiii. 2, 24. xv. 20.) Eli, of the tribe of Levi. (1st Sam. ii. 27, 28.) And when a King was called, it was Saul, of the tribe of Ephraim. (1st Sam. x. 1.)

17. And though after Saul, David, of the tribe of Judah, became King, and the Kingdom remained in his family for many generations, they were none of them made Lawgivers. In David and in his house the Lawgiver did not come forth of the thigh, nor between the feet of Judah. All the Kings of that line, not excepting David and Solomon, were subject to Prophets whom God set up above them in power. The Prophets could set up and drag down Kings, and command them in their encephalons and incoatings. (1st Sam. x. 1. xv. 1, 3, 22, 23, 28. xvi. 13. 2d Sam. xii. 1, 7, 9, 10. 1st Kings i. 38, 39. xii. 22—24. xix. 15, 16. xxi. 20—22.)

18. On the conquest of Judah, by the King of Babylon, the dynasty of David ceased, and was not restored at the end of the captivity, nor at any time previous to the coming of Christ. The Esdras Temple was built under Persian Government, selected without respect to their lineage. The Assyrian Kings were of the tribe of Levi. (1st Mac. ii. 54.) Herod was of Gentile stock.

19. Consequently, if this prophecy of Jacob be understood as speaking of the overthrow of the royal power in Judah, it took place several centuries before the coming of Christ.

20. But aside from that difficulty in the Christian exegesis, the gathering of the people was not to Christ. During the whole period of his ministry, Israel was subject to Gentile rule. He had very few followers among the Jews, and none among the Gentiles. The gospel did not go to the Gentiles, till after his death. He had the Priesthood of a Lawgiver, but no people to rule, for none gathered to him. He came to his own, and they received him not.

21. In the last days Joseph Smith, of the tribe of Ephraim, was called to the Prophetick office, the Shepherd and Stone of Israel, according to the prophecy of Jacob; (Gen. xlix. 24.) and after him James, of the tribe of Judah, and of the lineage of David, was called according to the prophecy of Jacob. (Id. 10.) the prediction of Joseph in Egypt, (B. of M. 2d Nephi ii. 2.) and the covenant of God with David, (2d Sam. vii. 12, 13, 16. Ps. lxxxix. 19, 20, 23, 27—29, 36, 37.) and stands in the office of Lawgiver, having translated most of the Law given to Moses, organized and established the Kingdom of God, and established the Law of God in it.

5. The second Degree is that of Counselor, and is Apostle, Prophet, Seer and King.

1. As Viceory, this Priesthood is capable of ruling in place of a Lawgiver in matters of administration and judgment. If there was an interregnum in the Priesthood of Lawgiver, the eldest Apostle of this Degree, associated in the administration, or if none was associated, then the oldest in fact would stand at the head till the place was filled.

2. Joshua succeeded Moses under this rule, having been ordained to only a part of Moses' authority. (Num. xxvii. 18—23. Josh. i. 1, 2.) By that example Sidney Rigdon had a just claim, as against Brigham Young, to stand at the head, after the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph and his Counselor Hyrum. The only reason his claim was not absolutely valid was, that a successor was duly appointed and ordained.

3. Like nearly every man who sets up a false pretence to the Priesthood, he did not long rest upon this strong position; but, without waiting for the true successor to set up his claim, pretended to have obtained the most holy Priesthood, by some new mode, not known to the Law of God, and so fell.

6. The third Degree is that of Ambassador. Of these there shall be twelve. They shall be Apostles and witnesses to the nations, and Rulers in all places where the Lawgiver shall send them.

1. The Apostles have the duty chiefly of preaching the gospel in all places, where it has not gone. When all the world is brought into the faith, they will be the chief representatives of the supreme authority, to be sent to all places to preside in Conferences, Councils and General Assemblies, and to conduct the affairs of government in all great matters. As the representatives of the Lawgiver, they will exercise royal prerogatives in the great divisions of the earth.

2. The Degree of an Ambassador is more honourable than that of the Kings of the earth; for these Ambassadors speak by authority, and Kings, who do not obey them, will be cast down.

3. But high as is the Priesthood conferred on them, they have no right to stand in the place of the Lawgiver. They cannot fill the place of Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator. They have not the keys of mysteries and revelations. (D. & C. xi. 4. xiv. 1, 2. ii. 2. ciii. 30.)

4. It does not appear by the Scriptures that before the time of Jesus Christ this Quorum existed. In Moses' time twelve were appointed to go and look out the land of Canaan, but their office was but for a short period. There seems to have been no office for this Priesthood, till the gospel was sent to the nations.

5. After the time of Jesus, the conducting of the affairs of the Saints remained in the hands of those who were of the Twelve during his time, and many have, therefore, imagined that the Twelve stood at the supreme head of the Church. This is an error. Peter was raised out of the Quorum of the Twelve, to the Presidency of the Church.

6. The intention to do so was announced previous to the transfiguration. Jesus said to Peter alone, "I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven." (Matt. xvi. 19.) To Peter alone, Jesus, after the resurrection, said, "Feed my lambs; feed my sheep;" (John xxi. 15—17.) signifying that he was to give the words of life, not only to believers, but to preachers.

7. And it is evident that Peter was in fact taken out of the Twelve. The apostasy of Judas made but a single vacancy in the Twelve, and that was filled by Matthias. (Acts i. 21—26.) Yet, without the removal of any other of the Apostles, Paul was very soon called to the Apostleship, and Peter took the general supervision of all the affairs of the Church.

8. Hence Peter, as the general head of the Church, addressed his epistles to the believers throughout the earth; whereas, Paul, as one of the Twelve, addressed his to those Churches in his jurisdiction.

9. John, also, after Peter's time, acted as Revelator to the Church, giving them the word of God to guide them in the ages to come; and also wrote a general epistle to guide the fathers of the faith, as well as new disciples. (1st John ii. 12—14.)

10. In the present dispensation twelve Apostles were called and ordained to this ministry. (D. & C. xliii. 5, 6.) In 1837 a great falling away took place at Kirtland; and the Twelve assumed authority in governing the Church, in derogation of the right of Joseph the Prophet; but God rebuked them, saying, "Rebel not against my servant Joseph, for, verily I say unto you, I am with him, and my hand shall be over him." "See to it that ye trouble not yourselves concerning the affairs of my Church in this place, but purify your hearts before me, and then go ye into all the world and preach my gospel unto every creature; for unto you (the Twelve) and those (the First Presidency) who are appointed with you to be your counsellors and your leaders is the power of this Priesthood given, for the last days, and for the last times." (D. & C. civ. 6, 7.)

11. Notwithstanding this, at the death of Joseph, Brigham Young claimed, in behalf of the Twelve, to supersede the entire First Presidency and stand at the head of the Church; urging upon the Saints that such was the true order, and that the Twelve had not been suffered to fill their proper place during the life time of Joseph; and in this claim was sustained by an immense meeting of the Saints, hurriedly assembled together at Nauvoo, the 8th of August, 1844.

12. One week later Brigham put forth an epistle to the whole Church, vindicating his claim, and it was generally accepted to in the Church. A very few followed the Prophet James, and as the Twelve could not stand against the arguments presented by his followers, they finally changed their position, acknowledged their former error, and attempted to patch it up by electing Brigham Young First President, and H. C. Kimball and Willard Richards Counsellors, which they accomplished at Winter Quarters, Dec. 24th, 1847.

13. This did not help their case in the least; for the same Law which placed the Twelve under the direction of the First President, made it necessary that the successor of Joseph should be appointed by revelation of God, through him. (D. & C. xi. 4. xiv. 1, 2. ii. 2. lxxxv. 2.) and that he should be ordained by an Angel. (D. & C. xiv. 2. compared with i. 2. 3. Ante p. 165. Note. Ordination by Angels.) They only succeeded in bringing Brigham Young into the Prophetick office by a revelation of the will of man, and no ordination at all.

14. At the same time James stood in this Priesthood, the heir of David, duly called by revelation of God to be a Lawgiver, an Apostle and a Prophet of the Most High God, ordained by the highest instituted power in heaven or on earth.

15. Nine days before his martyrdom, Joseph received and wrote a revelation containing this calling, and put it in the confidential archives of the Church. At the same time he sent the appointment to James in a letter. At the very moment of Joseph's death he was ordained according to the Law of God, and has from that time filled the office. Only two of the Twelve, John E. Page, and William Smith, acknowledged his calling, and the others being tried and condemned, their places were filled.

7. The fourth Degree is that of Evangelist. Evangelists are Apostles, and witnesses of the Kingdom, to whatever nation they are sent. Seven are a full Quorum; and there shall be but one Quorum to any nation, kindred, tongue or people.

The general duties of Evangelists are the same as of the Twelve. But their mission is only to a single nation. Very few have been sent, and a Quorum has never been organized in this dispensation.

8. Of Priests there are two Degrees.

9. The first Degree is that of High Priests.

All inferior Kings, Patriarchs, or heads of tribes, and Nobles, or heads of clans, ought to be of this Priesthood. They who are faithful in the calling have the gift of prophecy. Hence High Priests are frequently spoken of under the name of Prophet. (1st Sam. x. 5, 6, 9, 10. 1st Kings xviii. 4. Neh. vi. 7. Isa. xxix. 10. xxx. 10. Jer. ii. 8, 26. iv. 9. v. 13. viii. 1. xiii. 14. xiv. 13. xxiii. 14, 15. xxvi. 7, 16. xxvii. 15, 16, 18. Ezek. xiii. 3, 4. xxii. 25, 28. Amos ii. 11, 12. Mic. iii. 6, 11. Zeph. iii. 4. Zech. xiii. 4. Acts xi. 27, 28. xiii. 1. xv. 32. 1st Cor. xii. 28, 29. xiv. 29. Eph. iii. 5. iv. 11.)

10. The second Degree is that of Elders.

1. In degree of Priesthood the Seventies are the same as Elders. They have a different mission, and are therefore classed separately, and placed in different Quorums, with a different discipline.

2. The calling of an Elder is very honourable. So honourable is the title of Elder, that Apostles, Prophets and High Priests frequently adopt it. Bishops may be chosen from among the Elders.

3. Their duties are principally in conducting the general internal affairs of the Kingdom, and ministering in spiritual things, and in judgment among the Saints. But they may be sent on missions, under the direction of the Twelve, and may be placed for the time being under the direction of the Bishops where they may be sent.

11. In the Priesthood of life are three Orders; that of Priest, of Teacher, and of Deacon.

The Priesthood of life is commonly called the Aaronic Priesthood, after Aaron, who, with his family, in their generations held that Priesthood to the exclusion of the rest of Israel, from the time of Moses till Jesus Christ.

On the opening of navigation we shall commence issuing the Islander daily. We have a desire to enlarge the weekly Islander one column to a page, but hardly feel justified in undertaking it, without a little better encouragement. Its issue as a weekly may be anticipated after the opening of navigation, perfectly regular.

THE WINTER.

At the opening, the winter was usually spoken of as severe, but since the middle of January we have heard no such remark. The weather has been unusually fine. More work has been done in proportion to the population than any previous winter since the Islands were settled. But the thermometer marks a considerable increase of cold.

The mean for December, January and February this winter, is as follows: Dec. 22 deg., Jan. 14 deg., Feb. 12 deg. above zero. For three preceding winters, average, Dec. 26 deg., Jan. 22 deg., Feb. 17 deg. above zero.

Thus Dec. is 3 deg. colder, Jan. 8 deg., and Feb. 5 deg. than the average of the three preceding winters, or the mean average of increased cold is about 5 deg. for the winter.

The extreme cold of this winter was Feb. 13th, at 7 A. M., when the thermometer marked 19 1-2 deg. below zero. Of last winter the coldest was Feb. 5th, 9 P. M., 16 deg. below. The extreme of the preceding winter was Feb. 4th, 7 A. M., 11 deg. below. 1853 the extreme cold was Feb. 20th, 9 P. M., 4 deg. below, being the only time in the winter that the thermometer marked below zero.

Jan., 1854, the thermometer went below zero four days. Feb. three days. Feb., 1855, it went below eleven days. Jan., 1856, five days. Feb. nine days. March one day.

In another column we have notices of the cold throughout the United States, by which the reader will make his own comparisons. We may add that steamboats stopped running nearly the whole length of the Mississippi, on account of the ice. One was detained twenty six days in Arkansas. The peach tree, which is destroyed from Grand River, Mich., to the Gulf of Mexico, is thought to have survived here.

THOSE HORSES AGAIN.

Our readers will remember that a few weeks since the Pontiac Gazette had an article about the theft of six horses in Oakland County, charging that one span was brought here on a propeller, and saying all sorts of foolish things about the Mormons, because the horses were not found, though the Mormons furnished every facility in their power for the search; and that we convicted the Gazette of falsehood in nearly every word it said, and that, in the main, it owned them up.

Capt. Gibson, of the Propeller Plymouth, and his Clerk, Mr. Ellis, inform us that these horses have been found in Milwaukee, and recovered. They were landed at Milwaukee, instead of Beaver Island. As the people of Milwaukee are mostly Roman Catholics, we suppose the Gazette will now withdraw all its hard words, and charge the people of Milwaukee with being a den of Roman Catholic thieves.—Islander, Nov. 1, 1855.

We submit to every candid man—we submit to even the Islander—that the assertion that "we convicted the Gazette of falsehood in nearly every word it said, and that in the main it owned up," is too strong for truth. When we stated in regard to the horses having been left at Beaver Island, was on information, as was distinctly asserted by us. Hence, if the statements were false, the falsehood was not ours, but that of the information. Nor did we "own up," that we were "convicted of falsehood;" but that "we were mistaken."

Is the Islander very confident that the fact of the horses being found at Milwaukee disproves the charge that they were landed at Beaver Island? The fact of their being found at Milwaukee would naturally corroborate the charge that they were first landed at Beaver Island—since public attention having been called to the circumstances, and public officers of the law being on the watch, it is natural to suppose the horses would be secretly taken from the Island, and wonderfully discovered in another place.—Pontiac Gazette, Nov. 17.

Does that rule work both ways? If they had been found here, would you hold that conclusive evidence that they were stolen by the Catholics of Milwaukee? By the way, we should like to know how that process of getting them off from here is to be carried out without detection, with officers on the watch? unless the Mormons make a spiritual march through the air, like a balloon?

We wish some spiritual conveyance when we go a horse stealing, instead of going snooks with the Capt. of a Propeller. Perhaps Mr. Knight will take us apprentices.

"King Strang."

The Northern Islander, of St. James, comes to us this week, loaded down with curses, long and deep, against Mr. Hawks, the senior proprietor of this paper, supposing, as it appears to do, that Mr. H. had a hand in writing the article which appeared in the Record of 1st Oct. last, headed, "During Wholesale Robbery." In justice to Mr. Hawks, we can inform Mr. Strang, that, notwithstanding Mr. H. is one of the proprietors, he has had nothing to do with the Allegan Record for the last twelve months, and has not written a line for the paper during that time; being on the Lakes, we believe, when it occurred, of course knew no more of the transaction or the article in question than a man in Pella.—Allegan Record, Nov. 19.

We cannot see that this helps the Record's case in the least. The Record issues on the authority of Hawks and Manson. Both names stand at the head as the responsible men of the paper. Hawks is an officer of the United States, and goes off on official business, leaving Manson to edit the paper, in their joint names.

Transacting his official business, Hawks, who is well acquainted with Strang, entrusts him with the performance of his own official duties, and with his official signature in blank; and Manson, who does not know Mr. Strang, publishes, on their joint responsibility, that Strang is a robber, and the head of a band of pirates.

On this we say, if the charge on Mr. Strang has a shadow of truth to support it, the conduct of Hawks as an officer and a citizen is infamous. If it is not true, and supported by respectable evidence, then the conduct of Hawks and Manson, as responsible editors, is infamous. If, in conjunction with others, engaged in the same game, they should succeed in bringing about a new persecution of the Mormons, we shall hold them jointly guilty of blood.

We can see through the game. Several other papers had just dropped down heavy on the Mormons. The Record thought the move would be popular, and Mr. Manson did not know the position in which he was placing Mr. Hawks, and made up as strong an article as he could, to get it generally noticed.

Now, that he has got Mr. Hawks' foot in, they lack the manliness to say, what Mr. Hawks is abundantly able to say, if he pleases, that he has been through this country, and is well posted in all that is said here of Mormon piracy, &c.; and that he is fully satisfied that there is not the slightest ground for believing that they are guilty of anything in the premises.

But, two Mormons hold the office of Light House Keepers. Hawks, as Inspector, can get them removed. Perhaps he imagines that for the sake of office we will submit to insult. We shall not do anything of the kind. He may try his hand at getting them removed as quick as he pleases. Our position is safer than that of Mr. Hawks, and though public men, numerous as blackberries, sought to alternately kick and caress us, we should despise the caresses and resent the kicks. We are not under obligations for past favours, nor expecting future.

It is an easy task for Hawks to wash his hands, but until he does it we shall hold him responsible. As for Manson, whatever his opinion was when writing the article, he has long known it was unfounded. The fact that though a regular exchange, he withheld the paper containing that article indicates that he always knew it was false.

Dark hints are circulated in some of the Detroit papers, that the recent wrecking of vessels at Grand Traverse Bay was not occasioned so much by the winds and waves as by the villany of the person having in charge the light house on Illegal Island. The recent incumbent, a Mr. Davenport, has been discharged, and a Mormon appointed in his place. This business of wrecking vessels may be all well enough for the followers of Strang, but we doubt whether the people of Michigan will permit them within our borders long, if it can be proven that the wrecks in the region of Beaver Island are caused by any acts of Mormons.—But the charges made against the "Saints" may be false—at all events, for the credit of human nature, we hope so. Messrs. Perkins & Co., of this city, are interested in ferreting out the cause of the loss of their vessel—should it prove to be their vessel that is lost.—G. R. Daily Herald.

Very dark indeed these hints must be. Of a piece are they with the two score stories, originating in that vicinity, about the Mormons.

As soon as we saw the Herald's article floating around, we sent it to the Keeper of the Skillegalee Light, from which "Mr. Davenport was discharged, and a Mormon appointed," and in reply he furnished us his official book of "remarks," containing the following two entries; the former in the hand writing of the Keeper, but signed in the proper hand writing of Capt. Wilson; the latter in the hand writing of Capt. Wilson, and signed by himself and his mate.

October 6th, 1855.

Brig Julia Dean came ashore 3 o'clock, A. M. Capt. E. S. Wilson first saw the light three miles out. Did not recognize it as Skillegalee, until about three minutes before the vessel struck. Showed a torch light, supposed it a Propeller. Night dark from smoke. Fault, in not having red lights. No blame to Light Tender. Lights good, when the weather became clear. E. STEWART WILSON.

I saw a bright light, good according to weather, but no red to be seen. On examination of lights, only three red panes are here, which will leave one bright side.

Capt. E. S. WILSON.

Mate, E. GAYLORD.

This is the only wreck which has taken place near or in sight of Skillegalee Light House, since the removal of Davenport. After so long, will the Herald do the justice to correct among his own readers a false report, which has been extensively copied, and goes for gospel among millions of people?

In reference to the deficiency of red lights, it is just to remark that it is the business of Mr. J. A. T. Wendell, Collector of Mackinac, to furnish them; but he has been repeatedly notified of the deficiency, and will not supply them; and, finally, his refusal has been reported to the Light House Bureau.

There is a leaf in the history of this removal and appointment which is not inappropriate here.—Some Mackinac half-breeds had this Light House, and were detected in pirating wrecked property belonging to Messrs. Head, Campbell and Head, of Kenosha, who, after coming here and expending above seven hundred dollars in recovering the stolen property, made a statement of the case, and put it into the hands of Mr. Strang to prosecute their removal. As some wealthy men in Mackinac were parties in the piracy, and sharers in the spoils, they resisted till they saw the case was too strong to oppose, and then brought out their own candidate, and with the help of a great outcry against the Mormons, got him in.

Davenport, though of European parentage, was raised in the Indian country. His wife was a full blooded squaw. They spoke Indian in the family, and he was no more qualified for the office than any of the worn out half-breeds formerly employed by the furtraders.

Attributing wrecks at Grand Traverse to any neglect at this light is ridiculous. Vessels bound to Grand Traverse never approach nearer Skillegalee than thirty-nine miles. The Grand Traverse and Manitowish lights, by which they are guided there, and the scenes of numerous marine disasters, are not kept by Mormons.

There is one other fact worthy of notice in this connection, to wit: that for some years past, in nine cases out of ten, of wrecks within fifty miles of here, though the facilities are equal for getting lands from Mackinac, Grand Traverse, or Manitowish Islands, the masters and insurers come here for all the assistance they want. They know their men, and not one in ten will take any other help, if he can enlist a company of Mormons.

We regret to learn that the hulk of the Schooner Hope, wrecked at the entrance of this Harbour, last fall, has been burnt down for the unworthy purpose of plundering the iron. The ice had formed around the wreck early, and lying as it did in shoal water, it had sustained no injury since first striking.

Though the wreck would not in all probability ever have been looked after, either by owners or insurers, yet it is to us cause of the deepest mortification and regret that any such act of Vandalism should have occurred in our midst.

No doubt the newspapers, ever anxious for some opportunity to malign the Mormons, will seize on this, and howl loud and long. If the law gave the Magistrates here any power to punish the plunderers, they would not fail to do it. As it is, the powers that be have refused us Courts authorized to try such offences. We can do nothing. But we wash our hands of the iniquity, and shall be ever ready to furnish all parties injured any necessary information in seeking their just rights. Fortunately, the aggressors, if they cannot be punished for the crime, are abundantly responsible for the damage. Most sincerely do we hope they may not escape.

To a few of our readers it will be news that Mr. Banks was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, the 2d of Feb. Thus eight weeks were occupied in electing the presiding officer of the House. Mr. Banks is thoroughly Anti-Slavery, and is accused of being sectional. He is a man of ability, and we think will sustain himself creditably. His position is, nevertheless, a very difficult one, on account of the numerous factions in the House, and the want of any working majority.

The President has sent a message to Congress on Kansas affairs. He holds the late Legislature of Kansas, elected by invaders from Missouri legal, and the attempt of the people to form a State government, without the previous consent of Congress, treasonable. On the latter point he makes no show.—On the former he only shows that Gov. Reeder, whose business it was to see that the laws were faithfully executed, was overreached or overawed by the invaders. It is a scandalous piece of special pleading to give legal force to one of the most stupendous frauds ever committed under the form of law. The Democratic papers in this State do not sustain him. The Free Press, which is now conducted with more than usual ability, takes an eminently national position on the question, far above mere partisan or sectional prejudices.

Jacob A. T. Wendell, Collector at Mackinac, is furnishing the Fusion papers with material for attacking the Democratic party, for the appointment of two or three Mormons to office in the last three years. Let it work. We can stand this, if those who gave him office can.

By the way, he has more reasons for this than mere hatred of the Mormons. The Collectors at Mackinac, have regularly taxed the Light Keepers in the district $50.00 a year, and in some cases a larger sum, for their good will.—But the Mormons appointed against his remonstrance, will not pay.—We do not wish to be understood as saying that Mr. Toll demanded black mail of these Keepers. But such certainly was the practice, both before and since his time.

NEW TROUBLE.

The Garden Island Indians, or, if the reader pleases, the Roman Catholic Parish of St. Leopold, have rebelled against their Priest. It appears that he brought an ignorant Dutch Priest, who cannot speak one word of English or Indian, and tried to force him on them as a school teacher. They resisted, and he was obliged to give it up.

Difficulties sprang up, one after another, till he treated a woman at the confessional so rudely as to have a narrow escape from personal chastisement by her husband.

Things came to such a pass that the most influential Indians waited on him with a notice that, unless he left, they should drum him out of the Church, and hold an old fashioned powwow. The Priest left, and went to the east shore.

We suspect from what we hear, that Catholicism is not prospering there. Bishop Baraga, of Sault Ste Marie, has been there much of the winter. He has formerly stood exceedingly high with them; now they all speak ill of him.

Late last fall Rev. Father Weikamp removed to Little Traverse, with a company of the religious order of Saint Francis, and upwards of a dozen nuns. Having no houses to live in, they were quartered upon the Indians. Somehow the thing don't work well. The Indians don't understand why the Rev. Father needs so many women; and, spite of all influence, they will call them names, which we shall not repeat here. The days of Catholic control in that quarter are numbered.

An attempt was made this winter, originating at the Bear Creek Mission, to frighten the settlers away from Lake Mormon, by saying that next summer the Indians would molest them. Such a suggestion deserves only to be laughed at. The Bear Creek, Arbour Croche, Middletown, and LaCroix Indians are here daily on business, and on more friendly and social terms than ever before. Sometimes as many as a dozen teams are here hauling wood, and considerable numbers of men chopping.

If there was merchandise here to supply them, they would make all their purchases here. They attend Sabbath meetings with considerable regularity, and attend dances, and all the usual amusements with the Mormons. This intercourse the Priests have used their utmost efforts in vain to stop. Failing, they pretend concern for the safety of our outposts, and slander the Indians as treacherous; by falsely accusing them of intentions, which they have tried in vain to inspire. It is most unjust to the Indians to say that they are not sincerely friendly; more so from year to year. But if they should by any means become hostile, we could not be endangered; they are powerless to injure, and inoffensive in disposition.

We have late news from the settlements at Drummond Island, and around Lake Mormon. The report is very favourable. At Lake Mormon the settlements are sufficiently numerous, that no further anxiety is felt about them.

Some one has sent us the Grand River Times of Nov. 14th, containing the following:

"Mr. J. J. Strang, of Beaver Island, may expect to hear from us next week, in reply to his very complimentary remarks in relation to the Grand River Times and its Editor."

The Editor of the Times has not had the decency to send along the reply of next week. He has too little confidence in the success of his falsehoods to trust them where they can be answered. What sense of propriety and dignity of character have those men, who do not hesitate, without the slightest provocation, to accuse a defenceless and persecuted people of every form of offence, behind their backs, and, when they reply with proper resentment, to accuse them of being uncomplimentary?

Why are the Livingston Courier and the Grand Rapids Herald dumb? Or, have they let off another blast, and neglected to send along a paper?

A large wild Cat was killed on the west side of this Island. It is the first one ever seen on the Island, and is supposed to have crossed on the ice from the north shore. Since the above was in type we learn that this terrible wild beast was only an Indian dog; a hybrid of dog and fox.

As we hear the constant jingle of sleigh bells, we wonder why those who made so great a noise about the Mormons stealing horses, don't take this occasion to look for the lost. Horses cannot be hid now. Could not they "find one traitor in the rebel hold?" Pshaw! How the world loves to be humbugged.

We see every movement tending to unsex woman, and expel her from her own happy sphere of domestic duty, cherished and encouraged and patronized, until conjugal union, long since rejected as a sacrament, is now scarcely recognized as a civil contract, fitting loosely like an easy glove put on and off at pleasure, and her downward descent is surely proceeding through the various phases of Mormonism, Bloomerism, Spiritualism, to its latest shameless and audacious development of gross sensuality in the profligate doctrines of the Free Love League.—Catholic Indicator.

Not quite so fast, Mr. Rev. Indicator. The Mormons do hold marriage a sacrament. They deny the validity of divorces by the civil judiciary, and the legality of divorce, except for adultery.

They hold the man guilty of adultery, worthy of death; and except for the civil authority would not hesitate a moment in inflicting the penalty. But two cases have been known or heard of among them within nine years past, (we do not speak of the Salt Lake Mormons,) and in each the guilty man was subjected to the most terrible personal chastisement, thankful to escape with life.

Do you think, Mr. Indicator, you can show as clean a sheet in any one Catholic Church on earth? We defy you to the comparison. Why, sir, taking the Roman Catholic population for fifty miles around Mackinac for the comparison, and we can point out more cases of open, un concealed and shameless incest, than you can of suspected lust among the Mormons. You can stand off at a distance and cry at the Mormons. Fools enough will believe you. The Know-Nothings do the same at the Catholics, and the same fools believe them. Those of your readers who believe the Mormons a reeking mass of corruption, have their own opinions about the nunneries, too, and may break out some time as they did in France once. Pious people are not so suspicious of their neighbors.

In nearly all the exchanges we read of suffering and death by cold. Here we have not seen nor heard of so much as an ear, peeling from frost. The extreme cold has been less here by 12-1-2 deg. than in Tennessee and Arkansas. Our cold has been long continued and steadily intense, but none extreme, and it approaches and disappears so slowly that the system is always braced up to it.

We have a letter from an extensive shipper in Milwaukee, who thinks the first boats will come down between the 1st and 15th May.

There will be no obstruction on this part of the route. The chance of getting through the St. Clair will determine the opening. Our friends away will know the prospects better than we can advise them.

We have letters from most of the Elders out on missions, and generally the news is favourable. The prospect is for a large emigration next season.

SNOW.

The snow has been little if any more than a foot deep at any time, and has laid most of the winter nine or ten inches deep, making most excellent sleighing.

A bookbinder, who can do substantial work, in all styles, from plain to rich, will find constant employment at this place. One job of two thousand volumes, and several smaller ones, will be waiting and in a great hurry, at the opening of navigation. A gentleman of family, who would settle for a permanent business, would be preferred. Entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks, on all occasions, and unexceptionable morals, would be indispensable qualifications.

Three or four good boatbuilders, able to carry on a yard on their own account, would be pressed for more work than they could do.

Six or eight journeymen coopers would find constant employ, at good prices.

A house, boat, sign and ornamental painter is greatly needed here.

Three or four "jour" printers, of unexceptionable habits, can have constant employment here, at book and news work, the coming summer.

There is such a lack of qualified school teachers here as to make it really difficult keeping our schools in operation.

A baker and provisioner would find this place a most eligible location.

Who will come here and build a gristmill? There is only one small one here, and that is much the same as none. Numerous hand-mills are in requisition, for want of other facilities.

If some man would set up a cedar pail and tub factory, he could sell his productions at his door faster than he could finish them.

A wooden dish mill would give profitable employ to several hands.

Two men, good workmen at chairs, would get more orders, accompanied with the cash, than they could fill.

One bedstead maker would be equally fortunate in locating here.

A good brickmaker could find ready sales for several kilns of brick annually. Brick are now brought from Milwaukee here, and cost ten dollars per thousand. But we have as good claybanks as there are at Milwaukee, and the wood can be had for the chopping.

Three or four brick and stone masons and plasterers would find constant employment, at good prices.

It is so difficult to get joiners, that several persons have been obliged to postpone building, from the impossibility of getting the work done.

At this time there is not a single vessel owned at this place, where the trade is sufficient to employ three or four. There are men here able and disposed to purchase or build, if they could get reliable and trustworthy sailors to take charge of them.

It is deemed important to increase the number of settlers at Drummond Island the coming season.

It is proposed also to make two new settlements at important points on the east shore, and one on the north shore. For that purpose we wish to see companies, possessing a little means, with abundance of industry and economy, organized out of the spring emigration, to make the beginning.

Of the later emigration it is desirable to establish a row of settlements from the head of Lake Mormon, across in the direction of Thunder Bay. The locations are looked out, and the country to be occupied of the best quality, and now entirely destitute of settlers.

ICE.

The field of ice is extensive, beyond all comparison. There has been good sleighing for weeks, over broad, deep channels where ice was never seen before. Indian tradition says that ages ago, long before the memory of the oldest Indian, the ice was so for one day that men crossed from Big Beaver to the Fox Islands. The tradition has been generally discredited. No white man ever saw the ice closed across all this winter. Now it has been good crossing with horse teams for three weeks. Southwest of the Foxes a days travel, it is good traveling with horses, and no water in sight.

There has been no water east of the Manitowish, Fox and Beaver Islands since the 14th Feb., and within a week the passage might have been made with safety from Sleeping Bear to Port des Morts.

The ice is, in very few places, less than a foot thick, and very rarely two feet. Icebergs are rare, and next to no ice beached. A very short spell of really warm weather will waste it. There is every prospect that it will disappear long before the opening on Lake Erie. The wide field of ice, and absence of icebergs, is attributed to the light winds of the winter.

THAT STEALING AT DE TOUR.—Last fall Chas. Lemorandiere lent his name to J. A. T. Wendell to accuse the Mormons of stealing from him. At De Tour, where the stealing occurred, the charge was never credited, and the excitement died out immediately. Lemorandiere's nephew went to work for Mr. Seaman, the Mormon Elder there, and in his employ went to Manitowish, where the excitement was rife, and was shot on suspicion of being a Mormon. This is all that Lemorandiere got for lending his name to injustice. Not a Mormon is hurt, and the settlement are on good terms with their neighbors.

Our mails have been regular this winter, but three quarters the expense has been a private charge.

The ice in this harbour is 18 to 30 inches thick.

Since the matter of this paper was made up, we have had a sample of cold weather worth bragging on. Sabbath, March 9th, 7 o'clock, A.M., the thermometer stood at 16 deg. below zero. During the day it raised only to five above, with a bright sun, and perfectly cloudless. At 9 o'clock, P.M., it was down to 14 below, and slowly sunk till past midnight, when it moderated, and at sunrise Sunday morning it was 15 deg. below zero. Light north-west winds. We were about bragging on this as matches, but a friend at our elbow has a Buffalo paper marking still colder at Buffalo last April.

T. B. Miner, who publishes a paper somewhere, we shall not advertise what or where, some time since sent us his prospectus, with a request to publish, and the promise of a copy. We published the prospectus, but he did not send his paper. Now he has sent a specimen and circular to Post Masters, requesting them to obtain subscribers. This promise to send them the paper for money, is just as reliable as to send it to us for advertising; no better.

THE WEATHER.

THE CIRCLE OF COLD.—The range of cold is wider this year than in any year on record—they are putting up ice four inches thick, formed in the river about Austin, Texas, in about latitude 30°, or only about five degrees north of the tropics. The effect on vegetation, south particularly, is bad. In Florida the orange trees, it is feared, are ruined. In the neighborhood of Louisville, Ky., the peach and other fruit trees have been killed by the frosts. In North Carolina, thousands of dollars, it is said, have been lost by the injury done to the pine trees of that region, though we supposed that that tree could stand cold. In Virginia the apple-trees have been almost entirely destroyed. In Boston, the cold weather was so severe that the linden (baswood) trees which adorn the sidewalks split with the frost as if a wedge had been driven into them. But these will close up again in the spring. The phenomena of the life and growth of vegetation, under polar colds, is yet unexplained.—Free Press, Feb. 4.

The Green Bay Advocate of Jan. 17th records a number of accidents from freezing. The average cold, for 20 days previous to January 14th, was 124 deg. below zero. On the 8th, the mercury stood 24 below, at noon.—id.

Colder Ever Known.—Last Sunday morning at 7 o'clock, the thermometer stood at 28 degrees below zero. Decidedly the coldest weather ever known in these parts.—Clinton Express, Feb. 5.

Over the 9th, the coldest day of this "cold term," the thermometer stood at 7 o'clock in the morning, at Philadelphia, stood at 23 degrees below zero. At Baltimore, at the same hour, 8 deg. above zero; at Pittsburgh, 12 deg. below zero; at Buffalo, 4 deg. below zero; at Cleveland, 17 to 18 degrees below zero; at Cincinnati, 11 deg. below zero; at Marietta, (O.) 11 deg. below zero; at Hartford, (Conn.) 21 deg. below zero; at Boston, 3 deg. below zero. The great fall of snow, and the terrible cold accompanying it have detained the mails and travel generally throughout the country—at the South as well as the North, the storm South being a deluge of rain instead of snow.—Mormon, Jan. 12.

The winter at Superior had been open and fine. The coldest day was the Monday after Christmas, when the thermometer fell to 32 degrees below zero at St. Paul. As for cold weather, the thermometer stood at 32 degrees below zero at Kansas City, Mo., about the 24th of December.—Chicago Press, Feb. 8.

Monday and Tuesday last the cold was accompanied by terrible north winds, charged with snow formed by evaporation from the lake, in powdery flakes so small as to be almost imperceptible, yet so thick as to limit vision to a very few rods. Tuesday last was the bitterest day we ever witnessed. Only think of a hurricane with the mercury fifteen degrees below zero, and the air so thick with the driving frost that the opposite side of the street is obscured.—Miner, Jan. 12.

Temperature at Ontonagon Dec. 24th, 16 deg. below zero; 26th, 15 deg. below; 29th, 10 deg. below; Jan. 1st, 14 deg. below; 7th 15 deg. below; 9th, 12 deg. below.—id.

Never so Cold.—This morning, at 5 o'clock, the thermometer stood at 24 degrees below zero—the coldest morning, it is said, that has ever been known in southern Michigan.—Clinton Express, Jan. 25.

THE COLD ELSEWHERE.—At Chicago, yesterday morning, the thermometer marked 24 deg. below zero. At Horicon, in this State, it was 26, and at Hartford, 28 below; at Madison it was 25 below. The Telegraph reports the cold as almost equally severe on the Atlantic seaboard.—Milwaukee Sentinel, Jan. 16.

THE WEATHER MODERATING.—At sunrise yesterday, the mercury marked 18 degrees below zero; by noon it had risen to zero, and at 2 P.M. to 3 above. This is a vast improvement on the temperature of Wednesday.—id.

THE COLD WEATHER.—At Janesville, Wednesday morning, the thermometer marked 28 degrees below zero, and at Madison—the coldest weather ever known at either place.—id.

The weather has moderated this afternoon, and the mercury now marks not more than 10 or 12 deg. below zero.—id.

GREAT SNOW STORM EAST.—One of the greatest snow storms on record visited New England, New York, and the Atlantic States generally, on Saturday last. The snow fell to the depth of two feet, or more, and in many places the drifts were six and eight feet deep. New York City was fully buried under, and took all day Sunday to dig out. The Rail Roads in all directions were blocked up for two or three days.—id.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10. EXTREMELY COLD.—Several receivers on the different R. R. routes, now traversed by sleighs, were nearly frozen to death yesterday morning. One of them was nearly stiff when he arrived at the ferry. A number of others were frost bitten.

The East River is filled with floating ice, and navigation is greatly impaired.

BUFFALO, Jan. 10. Weather moderating.—storm still continues unabated. Lake Shore R. R. blocked up with snow, no train over yesterday. Buffalo city road the same.—train on Central road arrived very much behind.

A party left Marquette on the 9th January, and drove with a pair of horses to the village of Green Bay, a distance of about 200 miles, in five days. The thermometer has ranged at from 10 to 20 degrees below zero. The snow is about three feet deep.—Free Press, Jan. 28.

FROZEN TO DEATH.—The Davenport (Iowa) Gazette states that four men were lately frozen to death near Fort Dodge, and that eight others are missing.—id.

RATHER COLD.—The thermometer indicated 25 degrees below zero in this village, yesterday morning.—Marshall Expresser, Jan. 10.

OLD POINT WHARF.

The proprietors will be prepared to do a small business in the best quality of stambout wood, at this popular landing place, during the coming season of navigation. We have forty feet water at the front of this wharf, and therefore are free from the annoyance of getting aground.

Saint James, March 10, 1856

TO WOODMEN.

Any quantity of wood, which can possibly be brought forward, can be put on the Old Point wharf, at 12 1/2 cts per cord wharfage and commission on sale. The cash will be paid over the moment the wood is sold. Emigrants landing at the point will pass with their effects free of charge.

Saint James, March 10, 1856.

STEAMBOAT WOOD.

B. G. Wright, at Galilee, will be prepared to open trade in the spring with 3,000 cords best body wood, beech and maple, off wharf and beach, and facilities of bringing forward at the rate of 20 cords per day during the season.

This wharf is greatly extended, and in the best possible condition for the accommodation of boats.

Galilee, March 8, 1856.

How little reck's it where men die,
When once the moment's past
In which the dim and glazing eye
Has looked on earth its last:
Whether beneath its sculptured urn
The confined form shall rest,
Or, in its nakedness return,
Back to its mother's breast.

Death is a common friend or foe,
As different men may hold;
And at his summons each must go—
The timid and the bold!
But when the spirit, free and warm,
Deserts it as it must,
What matter where the lifeless form
Dissolves again to dust?

The soldier falls, mid' corpses piled,
Upon the battle plain,
Where reainless wasteeds gallop wild,
Among the mangled slain;
But though his corse be grin to see,
Hoof trampled on the sod,
What reck's it, when the spirit, free,
Has soared aloft to God?

The coward's dying eye may close,
Upon his downy bed,
And softest hands his limbs compose,
Or garments o'er them spread;
But ye who shun the bloody fray,
Where fall the mangled brave,
To—strip his coffin lid away,
And see him—in his grave.

were sweet, indeed, to close our eyes
With those we cherish near,
And wafted upward, by their sighs,
Soar to some calmer sphere.
ut, whether on the scaffold high,
Or in the battle's van,
his fittest place where men can die
Is, where he dies for man!

Dates from Salt Lake Valley are to October 11th.

The Mormon fall Conference met at Great Salt Lake City on the 6th of October, and continued in session three days. It was very largely attended—it being supposed that 5,000 people were present. The laity appeared to be behind in their tithings, and the most fervent exhortations were made by Brigham Young and others upon the necessity of making prompt payments, because Brigham expended $50,000 more than the Church find in bringing out emigrant converts, and unless the tithings were paid he would lose it.

Brigham Young stated publicly that he was personally worth over $200,000, and that he had sent a schedule of a portion of his real estate to England, to sell to the Saints about emigrating, and he thought that it would bring more than if he sold it to them after their arrival.

Brigham, in addition to the many private residences he now owns, is putting up a splendid edifice, next to the Governor's official residence. This building, when completed, will be the finest one in the whole of Utah Territory.

It is said that Brigham is down on the Union, and that he publicly stated to the Conference that the Mormons, thank God, were strong enough to defy the power of the United States, and that the United States might go to h—l.

One of the settlements on the extreme frontiers had been attacked by the Indians, and three of the Saints were killed. The Mormons at the settlement lost the greater portion of their cattle, and abandoned the post for the present. The Indians, who had pretended to be friendly, had, with a single exception, proved treacherous.

The crops in the southern portion of the Territory have proved almost a total failure. Northwardly of Salt Lake, the crop harvested is about an average. Flour, when sold, still remains at the price fixed by the Church, $6 per 100 pounds; but a scarcity of bread-stuffs is anticipated this winter, and the leaders are urging the faithful not to sell grain or flour to Gentile traders, but to put their produce into the hands of the Church to keep, for such as may need it during the winter.—Free Press.

The Smithsonian Institution has been informed that a new comet has been discovered at Berlin, by C. Bruhns.

SENATE.

NAME.	Term expires.	ALABAMA.	Term expires.
Hannibal Hamlin.	1857	Clement C. Clay, Jr.	1859
Wm. Pitt Fessenden.	'59	Benjamin Fitzpatrick.	'61
NEW HAMPSHIRE.
John P. Hale.*	'59	Stephen Adams.	'57
James Dill.*	'61	Albert G. Brown.	'59
MASSACHUSETTS.
Charles Sumner.	'57	Judah P. Benjamin.	'59
Henry Wilson.	'59	John Slidell.*	'61
RHODE ISLAND.
Charles T. Johnson.	'57	James C. Jones.	'57
Phillip Allen.	'59	John Bell.	'59
CONNECTICUT.
Isaac Toucey.	'57	John B. Thompson.	'59
Lafayette S. Foster.*	'61	John A. Crittenden.*	'61
VERMONT.
Solomon Pool.	'57	Benjamin F. Wade.*	'57
Jacob Cushman.*	'61	George E. Fugh.	'61
NEW YORK.
Hamilton Fish.	'57	Jesse D. Bright.	'57
William H. Seward.	'61		'61
NEW JERSEY.
John R. Thomson.	'57	Stephen A. Douglas.	'59
William Wright.	'59	Lyman Trumbull.*	'61
PENNSYLVANIA.
Richard Brodhead.	'57	Henry S. Geyer.	'57
Wm. Bigler.	'61.		'61
DELAWARE.
James A. Bayard.	'57	William K. Sebastian.	'59
John M. Clayton.	'59	Robert W. Johnson.	'61
MARYLAND.
Thomas G. Pratt.	'57	Lewis Cass.	'57
James A. Pugh.	'61	Charles E. Stuart.	'59
VIRGINIA.
James M. Mason.	'57	Stephen R. Mallory.	'57
Robert M. T. Hunter.	'59	David Levy Yulee.	'61
NORTH CAROLINA.
David S. Reid.	'59	Thomas J. Rusk.	'57
Asa Diggs.*	'61	Sam Houston.	'59
SOUTH CAROLINA.
Josiah J. Evans.	'59	John B. Weller.	'61
Andrew P. Butler.	'61		'61
GEORGIA.
Robert Toombs.	'59	Henry Dodge.	'57
Alfred Iverson.*	'61	Charles Durkee.*	'61
IOWA.
George W. Jones.	'59
James Harlan.*	'61

Total—59 Senators, and 3 vacant seats.

³ Not in last Senate.
Composition of all the Opposition of all shades, (in italics,) 25; regular Democrats, 34.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, (6th March 3, 1857.)

Dick.
1 John M. Wood,
2 John J. Perry,
3 Ebenezer Knowlton,
NEW HAMPSHIRE.
1 James Pike,
2 Aaron H. Crugin.
VERMONT.
1 James Meacham,†
2 Justin S. Morrill, 3 Alva Sabin,†
MASSACHUSETTS.
1 Robert B. Hall,
2 James Ballington,
3 William S. Danrell,
4 Lina B. Comins,
5 Anson Burlingame,
6 Timothy Davis,
7 Nathaniel P. Banks, Jr.,†
8 Chauncey L. Knapp, 9 Alexander De Witt,†
10 C. C. Chaffee,
11 Mark Trufon.
RHODE ISLAND.
1 Nathaniel B. Durfee,
2 Benjamin B. Thurston,† CONNECTICUT.
1 Ezra Clark, Jr.,
2 John Woodruff,
3 William Dean,
4 W. W. Welsh.
NEW YORK.
1 William W. Tark,
2 James S. T. Stranahan,
3 Guy B. Pelton,
4 John Kelly,
5 Thomas R. Whitney,
6 John Wheeler,†
7 Thomas Childs, Jr.,
8 Abram Wakeman,
9 Bayard Clark,
10 Ambrose S. Murray,
11 Rufus H. King,
12 Kilian Miller, 13 Russell Macy,†
14 Samuel Dickson,
15 Edward Dodd, 16 George A. Simmons,†
17 Francis E. Spinner,
18 Thomas R. Horton,
19 Jonas A. Hughton,
20 Ossamus B. Matteson,† 21 Henry Bennett,†
22 Andrew Z. McCarty,
23 William A. Gilbert,
24 Amos P. Granger,
25 Edwin B. Morgan,† 26 Andrew Oliver,†
27 John M. Parker,
28 William H. Kelsey,
29 John Williams,
30 Benjamin Pringle,† 31 Thomas T. Flagler,† 32 Solomon G. Hayes,† 33 FRANCIS S. EDWARDS.
NEW JERSEY.
1 Isaiah Clawson,
2 George R. Robbins,
3 James Bishop,
4 George Vail,†
5 Alex. C. M. Pennington,†
PENNSYLVANIA.
1 Thomas B. Florence,†
2 Job R. Tyson,
3 William Millward,
4 Jacob Broom,
5 John Cadwalader,
6 John Hickman,
7 Samuel C. Bradshaw,
8 J. Glancy Jones,†
9 Anthony E. Roberts,
10 John C. Kinkel,
11 James H. Campbell,
12 Henry M. Fuller, 13 Asa Parker,†
14 Galusha A. Grow,
15 John J. Pearce,
16 Lemuel Todd,
17 David P. Robinson,
18 John R. Edie,
19 John Covey,
20 Jonathan Knight, 21 David Ritchie,†
22 Samuel A. Parviance, 23 John Allison,
24 David Barclay, 25 John Dick.
DELAWARE.
1 ELISHA D. CULLEN.
MARYLAND.
1 James A. Stewart,
2 James E. Ricard,
3 James M. Harris,
4 Henry W. Davis,
5 Henry W. Hoffman,
6 Thos. F. Bowie, (And W.)
VIRGINIA.
1 Thomas H. Bayly,†
2 John S. Millett,†
3 John S. Caskey,
4 William G. Goode,†
5 Thomas S. Bechoh,
6 Phauls Powell,† 7 William Smith,†
8 Charles J. Faulkner,†
9 John Leitch, 10 Zelekiah Kidwell,†
11 John S. CARRISLE, 12 Henry A. Edmondson,† 13 Fayette McMillen,†
NORTH CAROLINA.
1 HENRY T. PAINE,
2 Thomas Reffin,†
3 Warren P. Watson,
4 L. O. E. Branch,
5 EDWARD G. PEABE,
6 RICHARD C. PUREYAR,† 7 Burton Craig,†
8 Thomas L. Clingman,†
SOUTH CAROLINA.
1 John McQueen,† 2 William Allen,†
3 Lawrence M. Keitt,† 4 Preston S. Brooks,† 5 James L. Orr,†
6 William W. Boyce,†
GEORGIA.
1 James L. Seaward,†
2 Martin J. Crawford,
3 ROBERT P. TRIPPE,
4 Hiram Warner,
5 John H. Lumpkin,
6 Howell Cobb,
7 NATHANIEL G. FOSTER,
8 Alexander H. Stephens,† ALABAMA.
1 Percy Walker,
2 Eli Shorter,
3 James F. Dowdell,† 4 George S. Houston,† 5 WILLIAM R. SMITH,†
6 W. R. W. Cobb,†
7 Sampson W. Harris,†

1 Timothy C. Day,
 2 John Scott Harrison,†
 3 Lewis D. Campbell,† 4 Matthias H. Nichols,†
 5 Richard Mott,
 6 Jonas R. Emrie,
 7 Aaron Harlan,†
 8 Benjamin Stanton,
 9 Cooper K. Watson,
 10 Oscar F. Moore,
 21 John A. Bingham?
 KENTUCKY.
 1 Henry C. Burnett,
 2 John P. Campbell,
 3 William L. Underwood,
 4 A. C. Talbot, Anti-K. N.,
 5 Joshua H. Jewett,
 6 John M. Elliott,†
 7 Humphrey Marshall,
 8 Alex. R. Marshall, 9 Leander M. Cox,†
 10 Samuel P. Swore, TENNESSEE.
 1 A. G. Watkins, Anti-K. N. 6 George W. Jones,†
 2 William H. Swierd,
 3 Samuel A. Smith,†
 4 John H. Savage,
 5 Charles Ravey,†
 6 John F. Wright,
 7 Frank K. Zolligoffer,
 8 Emerson Ridenbaugh,†
 10 Thomas Rymer,
 INDIANA.
 1 Smith Hilory,†
 2 William H. Eastick,†
 3 George S. Dunn,
 4 David P. Holloway,
 5 William Cumback,
 6 Lucien Barbour,
 7 Harvey D. Scott,
 8 Daniel Mace,†
 9 Schuyler Colfax,
 10 Samuel Denton,
 11 John E. Pettit, ILLINOIS.
 1 Ellis B. Washburn,†
 2 James H. Woodworth,
 3 Jesse O. Norton,
 4 James Knox,
 5 Wm. J. Richardson,†
 6 Thomas L. Harris,
 7 James C. Allen,
 8 Lyman Trumbull,
 9 Samuel S. Marshall, MISSOURI.
 1 Luther M. Kennett,
 2 Chester Paine,
 3 James J. Lindsey,
 4 Monceau Oliver,
 5 John G. Miller,† 6 John S. Phelps,† 7 Samuel Cantrich,† ARKANSAS.
 1 Alfred B. Greenwood,†
 2 Albert Rust, MICHIGAN.
 1 William A. Howard,
 2 George S. Walbridge,
 3 Henry Waldron,
 4 David W. Peck, FLORIDA.
 1 Augustus E. Maxwell, TEXAS.
 1 Matthew Ward,
 2 Peter H. Bell,†
 IOWA.
 1 Augustus Hall,
 2 James Thurginton, WISCONSIN.
 1 Daniel Wells, Jr.,†
 2 C. C. Washburne,
 3 Charles Ellingsworth, CALIFORNIA.
 1 J. W. Denver,
 2 Phillip T. Herbert,

DESTRUCTION OF THE WICKED

1. The use of philanthropy of the present time rejects the destruction of the wicked as one of the means of establishing righteousness. With some, philanthropy has got so far in advance of Godliness as to seek, pray for, and expect the salvation, everlasting life and unalloyed happiness of those who delight in sin, and take no pleasure in righteousness; believing that, in some mysterious way, God can make those happy whose chief delight is in wickedness.

2. But the common sentiment in Christian countries is, that irreligious and wicked men and nations ought not to be destroyed; and that the most corrupt and abject races and men have the same right to live and to exercise government as the most Godlike.

3. With Christian men this sentiment is entertained, with divers exceptions. They have little repugnance to the killing of those who keep the Commandments of God. They are quite satisfied that the destruction of the Canaanites was really by Commandment of God; but as certain that he will never command the destruction of any other corrupt nation.

4. The destruction of the Canaanites by the Commandment of God can only be justified on good and cogent reasons. It is not enough that they were creatures of God, made by him, and that therefore he had the right to destroy them. They were living, conscious beings, having a right to the life to which they were born, till they diminished it by violating the laws of life, or forfeited the right by such conduct as rendered their existence dangerous to better men.

5. The right to destroy the life of any man grows out of such conduct as renders his existence on the whole, a curse; and not in any capricious idea of absolute power. And the same rule applies to the extermination of races.

6. The old world was destroyed by the flood, in consequence of universal corruption; not merely corruption of manners, but hereditary corruption of the flesh. (Jasher iv, 16—18. Gen. vi, 5.) Sodom and the cities of the plain were destroyed for a similar reason. (Gen. xviii, 20, 21, 26, 32. xix, 4, 5, 9.)

7. In the long list of crimes recorded against Sodom, as the guilty cause of its utter destruction, the first is the custom of the whole population going out four times a year to a certain valley, with music and dancing; when every man seized whatsoever woman he would, and they all enjoyed the wives and daughters of their neighbours in their sight, and no man objected a word; (Jasher xviii, 13-15): a custom which has its counterpart in the Free Love societies of the present day. The natural consequence of this want of chastity was that beastiality, which has given the name of Sodom to the most loathsome of all human crimes.

8. Of a different character was another of their cherished customs; that of confiding the goods of such strangers as unfortunately fell into their hands, and distributing them among themselves, and pretending to receive each man's share as a gift. (Jasher xviii, 16, &c.)

2. But the fountains of justice were equally corrupted, so that the chief business of the Judges was to go through the necessary forms to give legal validity to acts of fraud and violence, (Fasher xix.) much as many Judges and nearly all attorneys occupy their time nowadays in Christian cities.

10. Thus corruption and wickedness pervaded society in all conditions, and prevailed in every act of men. There was no purity, no truth, as a foundation for reform. Every successive generation was raised up to incurable corruption and wickedness.

11. The end of such a people could be nothing but overwhelming destruction, and utter extermination. The only possible object in prolonging their decay, was to contaminate the surrounding nations, and bring them eventually to the same end. The destruction of Sodom was mercy to the human race.

12. The case of the nations of Canaan was like it. Corruptions similar to those of Sodom were national characteristics. They had doomed themselves to extermination, just as various races and nations have since done. To them the judgment of God was but a matter of time. To other nations it was a matter of defence from contagion.

13. But in the case of the Canaanites there was an especial mercy in the Law which preserved the female children alive, and gave them for wives to the conquerors.

14. An important purpose, to be kept in view, in a wise administration of national affairs, is the increase of population. This increase does not depend on the number of the men, but of the women. For, with polygamy, it is apparent that a given number of women will produce the same number of children, whether the men are many or few.

15. According to the Commandment under which most of the land of Canaan was overrun, all the virgin females were kept as wives to the men of Israel. These were taken into Hebrew families, and educated in their institutions. They became the wives of a brave and prevailing race of men, who would suffer no relapse into the customs of their country.

16. By the natural operation of the law of hybridity, the children of such crosses partake most of the blood of the prevailing race, and a few generations, under proper management, where one race continually rules with a uniform and rigid system, will obliterate all signs of the subjugated race, with scarcely any, perhaps no, diminution of the human race.

37. Thus in the conquest of Canaan, if the whole work had been accomplished according to the Command of God, the next generation would have exhibited about the same number of children of Canaanite maternity, but they would have been Israelites, instead of Canaanites. - As corruption generally begins with men, and but slowly extends to women, these women would have raised a righteous seed; who, educated as Israelites, would have been very little inferior to the men of the tribe.

18. The activity and energy developed in these great undertakings would have made the whole race superior to what the Israelites were in the beginning; as it was, the land was not depopulated, but its population greatly increased, and the Israelite stock not in any degree deteriorated by the mixture.

19. At the present time several nations, and some large races, have come to a point in corruption where they are incapable of saving themselves up. Without invasions or the pointing of any external force against them, they are slowly spreading from the earth, and making steady strides to certain extermination.

20. Among the converted or Christian Kanackers, the evil practices remain. The vices introduced and sown broadcast more than by Christian residents and sailors, have taken full deadly effect that the women are generally barren. The total loss is estimated at several thousand annually. The Sandwich Islands, which, when first visited by Christian Missions, contained a half million of these people, have not now more than 60,000.

21. Sacred unions of old Christian stock, are going in some way. If left to themselves, they will disappear from the earth. In their prolonged decay, they may contaminate many others. It would be a mercy could they be overruled by a righteous fate, and the weaker children alone preserved, and made wives to men of moral and hearty belief.

22. The whole course of prophecy indicates that the nations of the earth will not be converted to Godliness; but at they will increase in wickedness, and be destroyed. They has not yet come, but is in the future, which "shall burn an oven; and all the proud, and all that do wickedly, shall stubble," and shall be burnt up, leaving neither root nor branch; when they that fear the Lord shall tread down the wicked, as ashes beneath their feet. (Isa. iv. 1, 3.)

Paul assures that the coming of Christ shall be flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; so shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord." (2d Thess. 1, 8, 9.) Isaiah says, the wrath shall be made empty, and few men left. (Isa. xlvii, 1, 2.) "These days are days of vengeance, when Christ shall and the wine press of the wrath of God, and the blood shall flow into the horses' bridles. (Rev. xiv, 20.) As those times approaching, the judgment is pronounced on Babylon. "Rejoice, for as she hath rewarded you, and done unto her like, according to her works." (Id. xviii, 6.) Then shall the Lord execute vengeance on the heathen. (Ps. cxlv, 6, 7.)

Do Fossils and Rocks Grow?

Through the medium of The Scientific American, we learn that a man of great experience, named W. Emor, has recently communicated very curious views and strange information to the London Mining Journal relative to the growth of rocks and fossils. His views are entirely opposed to the Plutonic theory; and the common opinions of geologists, who believe that the fossils found in rocks, however deep, once lived and moved on the face of the earth, and were submerged by some convulsions of Nature, and buried where they are now found, in the coal measures and sandstone, &c. He says:

"We have a simple proof that quartz grows in a short space of time, which I could prove to any one who likes to accompany me through the mines. A person visiting Devon Connel's will have it pointed out. I am, for various reasons, inclined to think that all lobes, where quartz or other crystals are seen in the act of growing, are progressive lobes. While on this subject, I would call attention as to how these things first form. Do they germinate from a seed of their own kind? or what is the first formation, as I at all times find the first or centre to be of a different character from the outer portions? Again, how do they increase in size? I, at first, was inclined to think the addition took place from the outer side, by accumulation from aqueous gases passing through the earth; but I now discover it is not the case, as the very crystals at Devon Connel's have shot up by thousands from the lobes in the bottom and sides of levels where there is a current of air, which clearly proves that they draw their nutrition from the rocks below, which is carried up as the sap passes up in a tree; and rings may be often seen in quartz crystal when broken across, similar to those in a tree when sawn. Minute crystals of copper, sulphur, or arsenical mudde, adhere to it. Crystals are often found adhering to clusters of quartz.

"I next call attention to the fossil plant so often found on stones, and notice that they are at all times found to take the cleavage way of rocks, and to incline south or west, with the top of the plant upwards. Were these plants once embedded in sediment which had undergone upheavals, they would now be found lying in all directions, and not passing between the cleavage, as the cleavage is often contrary to the bed. Every different rock appears to produce its own species of plant. I have long doubted the fact of a large portion of them being plants, which once enjoyed the sun's rays. Query, are these plants the rock's natural produce, or the seed of living plants, that become spalled, and strove hard with nature to produce what we see? or did all plants germinate from the earth? I must mention a plant which I saw growing last Christmas, in a level from 70 to 100 fathoms deep, at North Whig Croft. These plants might be seen coming out of the joints, some not above six inches long, and others of various sizes—one was perfect, four feet high, spreading four feet, and stuck to the side like ivy to a wall. There were many others as large, but injured, as it was a working level. I can produce impressions of plants of the same kind, and as large, printed between the cleavage of stone. All these things are to be seen, as I never promulgate more hearsay."

in 1879 or 80 and it turn of month 4 1880

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. VI.—NO. 4.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1886.

WHOLE NO. 87.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,
LAKE MICHIGAN, BY
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time, will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation, in winter, the ISLANDER will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

WANTS.

A bookbinder, who can do substantial work, in all styles, from plain to rich, will find constant employment at this place. One job of two thousand volumes, and several smaller ones, will be waiting and in a great hurry, at the opening of navigation. A gentleman of family, who would settle for a permanent business, would be preferred. Entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks, on all occasions, and unexceptionable morals, would be indispensable qualifications.

Three or four good boatbuilders, able to carry on a yard on their own account, would be pressed for more work than they could do.

Six or eight journeymen coopers would find constant employ, at good prices.

A house, boat, sign and ornamental painter is greatly needed here.

Three or four "jour" printers, of unexceptionable habits, can have constant employment here, at book and news work, the coming summer.

There is such a lack of qualified school teachers here as to make it really difficult keeping our schools in operation.

A baker and provisioner would find this place a most eligible location.

Who will come here and build a gristmill? There is only one small one here; and that is much the same as none. Numerous hand-mills are in requisition, for want of other facilities.

If some man would set up a cedar pail and tub factory, he could sell his productions at his door faster than he could finish them.

A wooden dish mill would give profitable employ to several hands.

Two men, good workmen at chairs, would get more orders, accompanied with the cash, than they could fill.

One bedstead maker would be equally fortunate in locating here.

A good brickmaker could find ready sales for several kilns of brick annually. Brick are now brought from Milwaukee here, and cost ten dollars per thousand. But we have as good claybanks as there are at Milwaukee, and the wood can be had for the chopping.

Three or four brick and stone masons and plasterers would find constant employment, at good prices.

It is so difficult to get joiners, that several persons have been obliged to postpone building, from the impossibility of getting the work done.

At this time there is not a single vessel owned at this place, where the trade is sufficient to employ three or four. There are men here able and disposed to purchase or build, if they could get reliable and trustworthy sailors to take charge of them.

THE SPAULDING STORY.

1. Among the works published against the Priesthood of Joseph Smith, and his associates, and their successors, and the authority of the Book of Mormon as one of the Sacred Records, the leading work, from which all others are more or less derived, is E. D. Howe's "History of Mormonism." This work first appeared in 1834, under the title of "Mormonism Unveiled."

2. Of this book thirty-seven pages are made up of the certificates and affidavits of nearly one hundred persons, to prove that Joseph and his associates were vagrants, money-diggers, and superstitious, ignorant and vicious persons, and that they got up the Book of Mormon as a speculation.

3. First, among these is an affidavit of Peter Ingersoll, dated Palmyra, Wayne County, N. Y., Dec. 2d, 1833, certified by Thomas P. Baldwin, Judge of Wayne County Court, to have been sworn before him, "according to law," the 9th day of Dec., 1833. A few pages subsequent, are the certificates of six witnesses that Ingersoll is worthy of credit; a rather suspicious circumstance, considering that his veracity had not been questioned.

4. This same Peter Ingersoll is now a resident of Lapeer County, Michigan, and solemnly denies that he ever signed or made oath to the affidavit, or any other affidavit on the subject. As Thomas P. Baldwin certifies that Ingersoll did make oath to the statement, according to law, whereas, in fact, the law did not authorize him to administer any such oath, or any extrajudicial oath whatever, his certificate is, to say the least, not to be received against Ingersoll's solemn statement that he never swore to the affidavit. The certificate is certainly false in one point; for as there is no law for administering such an oath, it could not have been done according to law.

5. But as the name of Ingersoll is certainly forged, that of Judge Baldwin probably is. The title of his office is erroneously written to his signature, a mistake he would not be likely to make himself, though E. D. Howe, of Painesville, Ohio, might; not being acquainted with New York jurisprudence. In 1833 there was not in the State of New York such an office as Judge of the County Court. Circuit Courts, Oyer and Terminer, Common Pleas and General Sessions were held for every county, but there was no "County Court." Every official act requiring the signature of a Judge, was signed by him as Judge of some one of these particular Courts; not as Judge of some imaginary Court, having no existence.

6. Upon an examination of all these certificates, it will be perceived that not one of them is authenticated in legal form; some are not signed at all; they are often contradictory one to another; and much of them is on hearsay. Not one is certified under the seal of any Court. When it is considered that religious animosities are the bitterest of all human hatred, and that those were got up on the ground where Joseph commenced his ministry, among those most bitterly opposed to him, if the certificates were really genuine, the wonder would not be that though a righteous man so much was said against him, but so little.

7. Banyan, Luther, Calvin, Knox, Wesley, Whitfield, if so judged, on the exclusive testimony of their enemies, would come off worse, and Jesus and his Apostles far worse. But at this time, while most of the witnesses, whose testimony is recorded against him, are yet living, scattered through half the States, and able to answer for themselves, the Saints know and continually assert that most of these certificates are forgeries, never sworn, signed or seen by those whose names are signed to them; and they perpetually challenge the world to the investigation, assured that the cause which must be supported by forgery is rotten.

8. No one need start up in surprise and say, men would not dare publish forged certificates and affidavits. It is not a crime, by the law of any State in the Union. The affidavits, being extrajudicial, and of no legal force, the laws will not take cognizance of the forgery, if they are forged, nor of the perjury, if they are false. But E. D. Howe, the author of the book, is an Ohio lawyer, and in getting up the book attempted to give these evidences a legal form, and he has made such certificates over the names of Justices and a Judge, as those officers would not use in the State of New York, unless ignorant of their own official designations.

9. Moreover, though the object of these certificates is to impeach the credibility of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and the character of the Prophet himself they are anything but manly, and prove little against them but being superstitious. On this the accusers have no advantage of the accused; for Stafford, one of the witnesses, certifies that he furnished them a sheep to sacrifice to an evil spirit to appease his wrath, so that he would not spirit away hidden treasures they were digging for, and was to have a share of the enchanted treasures when found.

10. Not one word of this mass of testimony is worthy one moment credit, both because it is unquestionably forged, because, if genuine, it is too ignorant to be worthy of notice, and because often contradictory. It has received attention from those only whose minds were made up, and on the assumption that ignorance, superstition, and falsehood, was sufficient to refute what they had already condemned as ignorance, superstition, and falsehood.

11. The leading purpose of these testimonies was to overthrow the evidence that the Prophet Joseph possessed the plates, from which he professed to have translated the Book of Mormon. They have never been reviewed by his followers; yet our enemies, being the judges, they fail of their purpose; for it is now admitted, even by Mr. Ferris, late Secretary of Utah, the ablest writer against the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph, that he did "exhume one or more of those curious glyphs, which now figure so largely in the list of American antiquities, consisting of metallic plates, covered with hieroglyphical characters,"—"written from top to bottom, like the Chinese, or from side to side indifferently, like the Egyptian and Demotic Lybian." (Utah and the Mormons, p. 34.) And Thomas Ford, late Governor of Illinois, though he does not admit the actual existence of the plates, allows as a probable theory that the witnesses of the Book of Mormon thought they saw them; and, consequently, are not false and corrupt, but superstitious and deceived witnesses. (Ford's History of Illinois, p. 257.)

12. But the grand assault on the Prophetical character of Joseph Smith, is that known as the Spaulding story. This is to the effect that Rev. Solomon Spaulding, of Conneaut, Ohio, in 1810, wrote a book entitled, "Manuscript Found," giving a fictitious account of the emigration of some Jews to America, and their wars, settlements and national affairs, so as to account for the rumors and other antiquities about Conneaut; which manuscript afterwards fell into the hands of Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith, and was by them reconstructed into the Book of Mormon.

13. The evidence offered to prove this, is the certificates of seven witnesses, made in 1833, that they read and heard read the Spaulding manuscript, in 1810 and 1811, and that, on the introduction of the Book of Mormon there, subsequent to 1830, when it was first published, they recognized it as the "Manuscript Found," of Solomon Spaulding, with which they had been acquainted twenty-two years before.

14. The inference from these facts is, that the Book of Mormon, instead of being translated from plates, was copied from the Spaulding manuscript. Now, Conneaut is less than fifty miles from Kirtland, the gathering place to which the Saints began assembling in 1831. If the Book of Mormon was such an imposture, could the authors of the imposture, men who at least had the talent to succeed, have been guilty of the folly of gathering their disciples so near the scene of their imposture? It is incredible. A blunderer would have got out of the way of so certain exposure. Men who make such blunders, are never successful impostors. The leaders had no need to go to Kirtland, before all the great west, that they should thus set down at the very gate of exposure and inevitable ruin.

15. So great is the improbability that an impostor would do any such thing, that it could only be believed on the most overwhelming evidence. No motive can be imagined sufficient to induce any one to plagiarize a book, palm it off as an inspiration, build up a Church upon the imposture; and then transplant that Church bodily several hundred miles, and locate it only one day's travel, on one of the greatest, thoroughfares of the continent, from where their imposture was as certain of detection as the sun to rise. Nor could this going to Kirtland possibly be attributed to accident, or necessity. Smith and Rigdon pressed it on their followers.

16. The testimony of the witnesses ought to be read and judged, with a view to this exceeding improbability; and the genuineness of their certificates ought to be looked after with the suspicion engendered by the examination of the former set, accumulated by the same author.

17. Solomon Spaulding was educated at Plainfield Academy and Dartmouth College, and had studied Law and Divinity, and preached several years. (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 279.) His style must have been good. From his enterprise, his tastes and habits, and especially his fondness for reading and writing, it was probably highly cultivated. The style of the Book of Mormon is exceedingly barbarous, probably more ungrammatical, and worse English, than any other book in the language which ever went through a second edition, carrying upon the face of almost every page those peculiar Yankeeisms which a man of education never speaks, much less writes; and proves that whoever rendered it in English, whether author or translator, was very ignorant of the language. It may be said not to be translated, strictly, into English, but into a barbarous Yankee tongue, familiar to the uneducated of the last generation, but now nearly forgotten.

18. Yet these very marks of great ignorance of the English language, in either author or translator, are the marks by which the witnesses pretend to identify the work. Henry Lake certifies to telling Spaulding that the frequent use of the words, "and it came to pass," sounded ridiculous. Unquestionably it does; and for that reason Solomon Spaulding could not have so written. He could not have written in that style, to imitate the Bible, as some have said; for that language occurs many times as often as in the Bible, and could only have originated in a very barbarous language, having an exceedingly limited vocabulary.

19. The witnesses also remember that the names of Nephi, Leli, and others found in the Book of Mormon, occurred frequently in the Spaulding manuscript. Twenty-two years, the time elapsing between hearing the Spaulding manuscript read, and reading the Book of Mormon, is a long time to remember the mere fictitious names, interwoven in a romance, and the places where they are interwoven in dreams of fancy. The names might be remembered, without being in Spaulding's manuscript; and they originated some thousand years earlier. (Jud. xv, 9, 14. 1st Chron. v. 19. 2d Mac. i. 39.) and were in familiar use in the days of Samson and Nehemiah, though few readers of these names now remember where they have read them.

20. One of the witnesses, Henry Lake, tells of an inconsistency in the tragic account of Laban, contained in Spaulding's manuscript; and also in the Book of Mormon, which he pointed out to Spaulding, and he promised to correct; (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 282.) certainly a very strong circumstance, except for the material fact that the inconsistency is not pointed out, and does not exist.

21. Another witness, John N. Miller, whose memory is so tenacious as to recognize "many passages in the Book of Mormon as verbatim from Spaulding, and others in fact," and to "find in it the writings of Solomon Spaulding from beginning to end," recognized it by "some humorous passages" which Spaulding frequently read to company. (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 283.) As there is not a humorous passage in the Book of Mormon, his testimony, if indeed, he ever gave it, will go for nothing.

22. Another witness, Oliver Smith, remembers that Spaulding's manuscript gave an account of the arts, sciences, and civilization of the first settlers of America. (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 235.) But the Book of Mormon contains none of these things. There is not only no history of these things in the Book of Mormon, but they are so slightly alluded to in any way, that it is impossible to know what arts and sciences existed among the people whose history is there recorded; and the omission reveals that they were in a state of barbarism, because their history consists of little but civil wars, settlements, religion and wars.

23. They generally agree that the religious part of the Book of Mormon is not Spaulding's, and that his object was to account for the antiquities found so abundantly about Conneaut, by writing a romance which should be a plausible history of their origin. Now the Book of Mormon does not in any way account for the origin of those works. It does not place one of its scenes in that region, nor give account of the construction of any similar structures, nor does it appear by it that any person mentioned in the Book of Mormon ever saw or heard of the great Lakes of North America, or ever approached the Lake region, or the region of its peculiar class of antiquities, except as a fugitive, near the closing scenes of the book. And if the religious part of the book was taken out, most of it would be lacking, including every leading fact in the history of all those men whose names those veracious witnesses so well remember.

24. Had testimony like this been given in open Court, upon a regular examination and cross-examination of witnesses, no judicious mind would have deemed the case made out. But when it was picked up by a lawyer, in ex parte examinations of witnesses opposed with religious zeal to the cause he is attacking, it amounts to nothing at all. The plan on foot, it is a matter of surprise that so bald a case is made out.

25. Unable to get certificates signed to his own satisfaction, Howe has added an unsigned certificate of one witness, Artemus Cunningham, (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 286.) and numerous unsupported statements of his own, of what various other persons said and would have said if he could have found them, and asks the world on such ex parte, unsupported, contradictory, incredible and impertinent testimony and hearsay to believe the Book of Mormon was plagiarized from Spaulding's romance. Against the credibility of any part of the testimony that the Book of Mormon was plagiarized from the "Manuscript Found," is the overwhelming fact that, in 1822, Orson Hyde introduced the Book of Mormon at Conneaut, (New Salem, Ohio,) and there preached and built up a numerous Church among Spaulding's old neighbors, many of whom were familiar with his "Manuscript Found." They could not be deceived, and could have no possible inducement to establish themselves and their children and friends in a delusion.

26. But there was still another difficulty to encounter; that is, to show by what possibility Joseph Smith could have become possessed of Spaulding's manuscript. If it was unquestionably shown that he held it, it would be a question of no consequence how he came by it. But while the testimony that the Book of Mormon was plagiarized, was defective, it was at least necessary to show that Spaulding's manuscript might by possibility have fallen into Smith's hands.

27. So important did Howe deem this portion of his undertaking, that he traced up the family of Spaulding from Conneaut, through Pittsburgh and Amity, in Pennsylvania, Onondago and Otsego counties, in New York, and from there to the State of Massachusetts, where he found Spaulding's widow, and learned that she had left a trunk of Spaulding's manuscripts in Otsego county, New York. (Howe's History of Mormonism, pp. 287, 288.)

28. The light began to break. Here was a chance to prove the imposture by bringing forward the very book, written by Spaulding in 1811, which Joseph was pretending to translate in 1829. The trunk was opened, and in it was found "a romance, purporting to have been translated from the Latin, found on twenty-four rolls of parchment in a cave, on the banks of Conneaut Creek." (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 288.)

29. What further was done, Howe does not see fit to tell. He says that this was the wrong manuscript; suggests that Spaulding had altered the plan of his book, thrown this by and written it over again, and that it was the rewritten manuscript which Smith had plagiarized; says he showed this manuscript to several witnesses, who had already certified to the identity of the Book of Mormon, with the Spaulding manuscript, who excused themselves of a lie by saying, that Spaulding "told them he had altered his plan of writing." (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 288.) That such an alteration was actually made, is possible; for though Howe omits all mention of it, the testimony of the widow (then Matilda Davidson) and daughter of Spaulding (Mrs. McKinstry) published in the Quincy Whig, shows clearly that the genuine duly entitled "Manuscript Found" was delivered personally to Hulbert, Howe's agent, in 1834, at Monson, Massachusetts.

30. Failing thus to identify the works, he returns to the important task of showing that by possibility Smith could have possessed himself of the "Manuscript Found." And on this point he asserts this, no more: that the widow thinks the manuscript was once taken to the printing office of Patterson and Lambdin, at Pittsburgh; (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 287.) that Lambdin is dead, and, therefore, cannot testify, and Patterson does not know anything whatever on the subject. (Id., p. 289.)

31. This is absolutely all that he pretends to have made out. Here starts conjecture; that as Rigdon came to Pittsburgh, in 1823 or 1824; is said to have been intimate with Lambdin, studied the Bible, went into the Western Reserve, Ohio, and commenced preaching there the Campbellite doctrine, then new, and contained in the Book of Mormon, as well as the Bible, about the same time that the veracious Palmyra witnesses have Smith engaged in money digging, tavern lounging, and vagrancy. Lambdin must have surreptitiously copied Spaulding's manuscript; Rigdon must have stolen Lambdin's copy; rewrote it to suit his purpose; and, in some of his long clerical visits to Pittsburgh, struck off three hundred and fifty miles, through the wild byways of the Alleghany mountains and the Susquehanna River, to where the boy vagrant Joe was digging money, and employed him to found a new religion. (Howe's History of Mormonism, pp. 289, 290.)

32. This is the whole case, as made out by Howe, in his Mormonism Unveiled, in 1834. This work, under the title of History of Mormonism, has gone through numerous editions since; but all end here. Time has not added one word. The friend and assistant of Howe, Philastus Hulbert, spent a full year in tracing up the Spaulding manuscript, and accumulating testimonies, guesses and forgeries, of which the latter make the largest share. What does it make out? Unanswered, is there enough of it to raise a suspicion? If suspicion was already awakened, is there anything to confirm it? Does not the meagreness of the case, and the suspicious character of the testimonies, damn the accusers?

33. Though this tale was swallowed by those who were ready to believe anything against the Prophet, either with or without evidence, there were those who saw the necessity of obtaining something in the shape of testimony. Resort was had to Mrs. Davidson, late widow of the late Solomon Spaulding, to see if in her waning years her memory had not brightened.

34. Austin, of Monson, and Storrs, of Hollister, Massachusetts, visited the widow of Spaulding, and after obtaining what information they could, drew up a letter, to which Austin signed her name, agreeing in some minor features with Howe's History, but stating that Spaulding did exhibit "his manuscript" to Patterson, who was much pleased with it, and borrowed it for personal use, and after retaining "it a long time," informed Mr. Spaulding, that if he would make out a title page and preface, he would publish it; and also that the manuscript was carefully preserved by her till Hulbert, (Howe's agent) called upon her for it, in Monson, Massachusetts, in 1834; contrary to Howe, who makes her say she "has no distinct knowledge of its contents," and is quite uncertain whether it was ever brought back from Patterson and Lambdin's printing office." (Howe's History of Mormonism, pp. 287, 288.)

35. This letter alleges that "Sidney Rigdon was at that time (which she makes some time previous to 1813) connected with the printing office of Patterson and Lambdin;" and that the manuscript was returned to Mr. Spaulding, when he removed to Washington county, where he died, in 1816, and that she took it with her, and it has been frequently read by her daughter, Mrs. McKinstry, of Monson, Massachusetts, and other friends, till 1834, when Philastus Hulbert (Howe's assistant) came, introduced by her old neighbours, Henry Lake, Aaron Wright, and others, to get it for the purpose of comparison with the Book of Mormon. This letter was published in the Episcopal Recorder, of Sept. 12, 1840, the Philadelphia Saturday Courier, of Nov. 16, 1842, and the newspapers generally.

36. This so far contradicted Howe's version, in the attempt to make a stronger case, that numerous persons called on the widow and daughter of Spaulding, in Monson, to make personal inquiries. Among them, Mr. John Haven, of Hollister, Middlesex county, Massachusetts, published in the Quincy Whig a letter stating that the widow says she never signed the letter published over her name, and never saw it till after its publication, and had no agency in the origin of it, except answering some questions asked by D. R. Austin, who afterwards wrote the letter, without her authority.

37. But she states the important fact, that she delivered the original manuscript to Philastus Hulbert, the associate of Howe, on an agreement of his to publish it, and give her half the profits; and that she subsequently received a letter, stating that it did not read as they expected, and they should not publish it.

38. In Howe's History of Mormonism, the fact that the real Spaulding manuscript was in the author's hands, was covered by a very thin veil. It is difficult to read the published letter in the name of Spaulding's widow without perceiving that fact, though it is not positively stated. But here it comes out clear and distinct.

39. Howe, when he published the History of the Mormons, had the Spaulding manuscript entire, and unaltered before him. He had employed an agent to travel more than one thousand miles, in tracing it up; got possession of it, and compared it line by line with the Book of Mormon. Had there been one page which agreed, he would have copied it in his "Mormonism Unveiled," as the unanswerable evidence that Joseph Smith was an impostor, and the Book of Mormon a plagiarism. "It did not read as they expected." The Conneaut witnesses were dishonest, or mistaken. This is the bitter end of the Spaulding story.

40. But it may not be amiss to set down some additional facts, showing that the whole body of those who had a hand in making and propagating it, were willing to resort to falsehood. In the letter extensively published over the name of Spaulding's widow, she is made to say, "Sidney Rigdon, (one of the founders of the sect,) who has figured so largely in the History of the Mormons, was, at that time, 1812, '13 and '14, connected with the printing office of Mr. Patterson, as is well known in that region."

41. Now, Spaulding went to Pittsburgh in 1812, and remained but two years. (Howe's History of Mormonism, pp. 282, 287.) And Rigdon did not go to Pittsburgh till 1823 or 1824. (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 289.) So that at least nine years before Rigdon ever visited Pittsburgh, the manuscript was returned to Spaulding; for the widow, in the same letter, certifies that "the manuscript was returned to the author, who soon after removed to Amity, Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he died in 1816. The manuscript then fell into her hands, and was preserved carefully. It has frequently been examined by her daughter, Mrs. McKinstry, of Monson, Massachusetts, and by other friends."

42. Moreover, if Rigdon had been connected with Patterson's printing office, that fact could have been proved by Patterson himself. And it was a very important fact for Howe, in making his case. Howe did apply to Patterson for information, and learned that Rigdon arrived at Pittsburgh in 1823 or 1824, but did not learn that he was ever in the printing office for one moment. And it otherwise appears that the firm was dissolved, and the business closed long before that time. The only inference is, that, in endeavoring to supply a known vacuum in the evidence, Austin and Storrs set down this falsehood in the letter, to which they set her name, without any authority whatever.

43. To set this question fully at rest, John E. Page, while in Apostolic charge of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in Pittsburgh, in 1843, published a book on this Spaulding story, in which he furnishes numerous affidavits, certificates and testimonials that Rigdon was but fifteen years old when Spaulding went to Pittsburgh, and but seventeen when he left there, and was all that time at work on his father's farm, and that he remained there employed only at farm labour till 1819, five years after Spaulding left Pittsburgh, and three after his death; and that the Spaulding manuscript was in the continual keeping of Spaulding, Mrs. Spaulding and their daughter, from when it left Patterson's office, in 1812, 1813, or 1814, when Rigdon was a farm boy in the back country, of fifteen to seventeen years, till 1834, when it was put into the hands of Hubert, the agent of Howe, to be published as an expose of the plagiarism of the Book of Mormon.

44. This work of Page's, issued on the very scene of action, all its statements supported by the testimony of witnesses then living at and in the vicinity of Pittsburgh, distributed by thousands, and challenging investigation, no man ever attempted to answer. Not a position or an assertion in it was ever attacked. Not a man can be found on earth who, after reading it, pretended to believe the Spaulding story. Not a man can be found in Pittsburgh who pretends that Rigdon was ever in Patterson and Lambdin's printing office, or ever saw Lambdin.

45. Not only is there this entire failure to trace the Spaulding manuscript to Rigdon, but there has never been the first step made towards tracing it from Rigdon to Smith. In the investigation which so grave a question has called out, both Rigdon and Smith have been traced, step by step, from their cradles till after the publication of the Book of Mormon; and not an iota of evidence has been produced that they were ever within three hundred miles of each other; or that either of them had any kind of fame or notoriety by which the other could be possibly have heard of his existence, until after Joseph translated the Book of Mormon.

46. While the matter was yet fresh in the public mind, Rigdon, through the newspapers, denied having ever seen or heard of Spaulding, or his manuscript; denied having any connection with, or knowledge of, Patterson and Lambdin's printing office, or any acquaintance with Lambdin; and challenged investigation at Pittsburgh, where plenty of witnesses could be found to contradict him, if his statements were not true.

47. Patterson remained there, an influential citizen, and a respectable member of a Christian Church. In 1842, Rev. S. Williams, of Pittsburgh, undertook the task of supplying the lacking evidence, and published a work called, "Mormonism Exposed," in which he failed to produce a single witness that Rigdon had any connection with the printing office, or Lambdin.

48. Though eight years before, when "Howe's History of Mormonism" was published, Patterson had no recollection of any such manuscript, (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 289,) he now certifies that some gentleman from the east did bring there a singular manuscript, chiefly in the style of the Old English Bible, of which he read a few pages. But unfortunately for our accusers, he certifies that the manuscript was committed, not to Lambdin, but to Silas Engles, a man of most excellent character, who had charge of the entire concerns of the office; was a good scholar, and an excellent printer, to whose decision was entrusted even the question of the morality and scholarship of works offered for publication; and that Engles, after a few weeks, returned the manuscript to its author.

49. The sum of the facts, therefore, is this: 1st. The testimony offered to prove that the Book of Mormon has any similarity to Spaulding's "Manuscript Found," is of the most doubtful character; quite as likely to be forged as genuine; and, if genuine, more likely to be false than true. 2d. The original, unmitigated "Manuscript Found," was in the hands of E. D. Howe, of Painesville, Ohio, in 1834, when he first published his History of Mormonism, and was by him suppressed, because there was no resemblance between it and the Book of Mormon. 3d. There is no evidence that Lambdin ever saw or heard of the Spaulding manuscript. Patterson's testimony shows it improbable that he saw it; impossible

(Concluded on fourth page.)

An English paper says that the magistrates in Lemington have discountenanced all prosecutions of persons for keeping houses of ill-fame, on the ground that it would drive all the gentlemen away, and ruin the town!—Mormon.

If that was a Mormon town, what a powow would all the papers raise? Being a christian town, all is natural.

There are several Chinese firms in California that have invested over $500,000 in their business; and there is more than two millions of dollars capital invested in the trade between San Francisco and China, owned and controlled by Chinamen residing in that city.

GALENA AHEAD.—We learn from the Galena Advertiser, of Friday, that on Sunday morning last, the 3d instant, several thermometers in that town marked thirty-eight degrees below zero. This is twelve or thirteen degrees lower than we have ever known the mercury to fall here.—Sentinel.

ABSOLUTION FOR A SHILLING.—In a recent pastoral letter to his diocese, Bishop TIMON, of Buffalo, made the following announcement: On Sunday next, or any day more appropriate for the purpose, before the 5th day of November, each pastor shall receive donations either by collections in the church or by visitation, as might be considered most proper. And according to the power vested in us, we grant absolution for forty days to any one, who for zeal for the holy Catholic unity, and for the embellishment of the house of God, and to the honour of the holy St. Joseph, will contribute one shilling. for the

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1856.

The attention of emigrants coming up this spring is directed to our tables of prices, as their best guide in selecting their purchases. Those coming early, ought not to bring large amounts of stock, because freights will be high; but in June, or July, cattle can be brought to advantage.

Sheep are very scarce here, and ought to be extensively introduced. Any one having a flock to part with, would do better by bringing them here, than selling before. Those who want cows, oxen, or horses, must bring them. The demand here is constantly greater than the supply.

Among emigrants, those who wish to learn right ways, are desirable. Those who know all things, and seek to become directors, may just as well stop short, or go further. Mormonism offers to enlighten the world; not to be enlightened by it; and whether a vain fool, sporting in uncouth fancies, or a young giant, walking in strength, it will not suffer itself to be guided, except by an affluant from the divine mind. Those who do not believe God's ministers can tell them much more than they know, and do not expect to be guided by the telling, had better let it alone.

We did not choose this as our place of dwelling, but God chose it for us. Those who don't think so, had better choose one for themselves somewhere else. True, we are of opinion that this is a good place to get rich; but that is not the chief end of life.

Those who prefer riches above all things, would find themselves situated, like a young kitten, in a strange garret. Though industrious habits are encouraged, and are unusually prevalent, the accumulation of wealth is generally regarded as of secondary consequence; and those who place it before all things, fall into disrepute. The possession of property gives no such influence or position in society as is commanded by sound faith, a godly walk and conversation, and the sentiment of the brotherhood of the Saints.

Those who expect to astonish the Islanders by a display of furniture, apparel or supercilious manners, had better remain where they are. Not only at this place, but at almost any point beyond here, they are much more likely to be laughed at, than imitated.

Above all persons, those who use intoxicating liquors had better stay away, till they make up their minds to quit once and forever. Not only the liquors, but all who use them, are regarded as nuisances, to be abated by every lawful means, and not to be countenanced a moment. No amount of talent or industry will compensate for this pernicious habit; and the man who occasionally goes on a boat to take a drink at the saloon, is regarded as a disgrace to the community. However unexceptionable his appearance at the present time, we cannot conceal from ourselves what he will be in the end.

SPRING OPENING.

The snow is slowly wasting, and nearly gone in the fields, but only slightly diminished in the woods. Sleighing is generally done, and wagons occasionally appear in the streets.

Sugaring has begun, but not much has been done at it.

The ice remains undisturbed, as at our last issue. We are fully warranted in saying that from forty miles south-west of the Manitue Islands to Mackinac, there is no open water. Teams are constantly crossing from here to Charlevoix, and emigrants are going over with their effects, and driving stock. They report the ice two feet to two and a half thick, and free from faults.

Teams are crossing to Bear Creek, to get wheat ground. The abundance of wheat and this facility of getting grinding, will prevent any scarcity, even if the opening should be later than is now anticipated.

Indian teams are crossing in all directions constantly, and report the ice good everywhere. It is on an average thicker than at our last issue, but the mouths of rivers are generally open, and slowly enlarging the slight opening which they make in the Lake.

Though we have had moderate thawing weather on land much of March, there have been but few thawing days on the Lake. With the entire surface covered with ice, the Lake winds are colder than land breezes; whereas, if it was partially open, they would this season of the year be warmer.

The small Lakes inside do not usually open till after Lake Michigan, but they are generally opening. Teams quit crossing them near two weeks since, on account of the defectiveness of the ice, and they are not safe for footmen.

Lake Mormon begins to show water, and the emigrants going up have to use extreme care in avoiding rotten ice.

The snow has been scarcely above a foot deep here, but as soon as we strike mainland shore it is deeper, and at the head of Lake Mormon is full three feet. Probably a few miles beyond, it is four; possibly still deeper.

As no past season parallels this, it is difficult determining when to look for the opening. It is the common opinion that two weeks of warm weather would waste the ice, but no one is looking for boats till May; and if they do not arrive till the 15th, few persons will be disappointed. The Straits are almost certain to open before Lake Erie and Saint Clair; and until boats can pass Lake Saint Clair, none will go down.

The ice will leave here very rapidly, because there is positively none in banks and bergs. There are no masses piled up on the shoals as barriers, to protect field ice from the storms. When it becomes so warm that ice ceases to make, a week will finish it.

UP NORTH.

Not long since the paper at Superior City boasted being issued from the highest latitude. The Miner, at Ontonagon, an excellent paper, by the way, claims the advantage, being about twelve miles nearer the poles, in 47 deg. north latitude. We have no pretensions to being a near neighbour to old Boreas, being in only 45 deg. 45 min., or a trifle nearer the pole than the equator. But the Mormon paper at Puget's Sound issues from further north than any other paper in the United States. If anybody on the continent has got a daily up north of us, we would like to see it. Will Montreal and Quebec both speak at once? Nobody will drown their voices.

We have before announced our intention of issuing a daily from this office, the current year, and proposed to commence with the opening of navigation. In advance of this arrangement, the first number was issued the 1st inst. This undertaking involves the necessity of changing our width of column, and is to be accompanied with an enlargement of the weekly. While the change is in progress, we are subjected to a variety of inconveniences which will make the appearance of both papers a little irregular. A large amount of book work and an occasional transfer of an article in book type to the paper, aggravates the inconvenience.

Before Dixon left Charlevoix he went to the Indians about Little Traverse, and tried to get them to sign a paper asking the removal of the Mormons from the vicinity of Lake Mormon. Not one signed it. We have this from the Indians. The fact is significant. We believe that he made the most untiring efforts to raise a mob from Grand Traverse, to drive them out; but entirely failed. It is said that some ill advised men went to assist him in arson and murder, but backed out for want of flumbers and whiskey.

We have finally decided on enlarging the Islander, and as soon as our present stock of paper is exhausted shall increase it about four inches in length, and make it 24 columns instead of 20. Our purpose is to issue it every week, without failure. Will our subscribers now give us a lift?

Flogging.

A man, not far from here, was called to account this week; and, after a careful and fair examination as to the facts, condemned to thirty-nine lashes with a beech, for lying, tale-bearing, and endeavouring to incite to mischief and crime. The next day he was around bragging that it did not hurt him, and proposing his readiness to take another. The next he picked up the butts of the beeches, and took them around to show, asking sympathy of the tender hearted. But the greatest curiosity was to see a lady, who used occasionally to beat a black servant girl with an iron poker, bigger than any of them, exhibiting one of the sticks, and thinking it was too cruel. By the way, we have seen that same lady beat a man with a press-board, and do it with a will, and did not think it cruel at all; and were not at all sorry to see another man, whom she has since wished to get flogged, help her through with it.

It is rare that a loafer is seen here. But there is no jail, and sometimes they must be punished, otherwise society would not be safe. Even children, little boys and girls, get flogged occasionally. When you hear a woman expressing unusual sympathy for a whipped loafer, you can set down with safety that she knocks her own children endways; is cruel to servants, and would drive a horse to death, if she had one. It will be true in nine cases in ten.

As we go to press (April 3) we are in the midst of a severe thaw. Tuesday the thermometer rose to 48 deg., being the highest point reached since the 14th Nov. It thawed all night. At midnight there was a hard rain, the first since Dec. 8th, and it continues to thaw moderately, with good prospects of a rapid wasting of the ice.

The first of April three teams crossed on the ice between this place and Charlevoix, forty miles. The ice closed across this channel Feb. 14, being the first time in the memory of man. It has been closed near seven weeks.

COMMERCIAL.

REVIEW OF THE MARKET.

April 3d.

FLOUR.—The supply is small, and sells at $10 per bbl. The facilities for grinding are so poor that the price is not likely to fall till a new supply reaches here, notwithstanding the known decline in the markets above and below.

WHEAT.—There is a considerable supply of both winter and spring wheat, most of it of second rate and inferior, but some of it of an excellent quality. The best spring wheat is in good demand for seed, at $1.25. Small quantities of winter, spring and mixed are reserved for shipment. But the demand for grinding is considerable, and increasing with the advance of the season. It rates at $1.00 to $1.25, and the supply is better than the demand. Small quantities go to Bear Creek on the ice, to grind. Of inferior wheat saved from wrecks, the supply is abundant, and sells from 50 to 75 cents for feed. It is a very cheap feed. Much of it would do well to grind, if there was a short stock.

BARLEY.—This grain is in request for seed, at $1.25 per bushel, and scarcely to be had at that.

RYE.—No rye is to be had.

CORN.—There is a good supply of corn for use, but scarcely any for sale. It rates at 75 cts. to $1.00.

OATS.—Oats are worth 50 cts. per bushel. The price is kept up by the prospect of a late spring. And though wheat can be had much cheaper, many teamsters prefer the oats, at the increased prices. Oats in the bundle are worth 4 to 5 cts.

BUCKWHEAT.—This grain is rather plenty, but finds a ready sale at 75 cts. The facility of grinding buckwheat by hand, and the season of sugaring, makes a brisk demand.

BEANS.—Good beans are rather scarce, at $2.00 to $2.50, and in request.

POTATOES.—Potatoes sell yet at 50 cts., but with a general expectation of a rise. At Patmos as high as $1.00 has been paid, and an agent from North Manitue, who proposed to haul with sleighs over the ice, failed to get a supply at that. The quantity on hand last fall, in all the Islands, was very large; and if they are well wintered, the supply for spring sales will be abundant. Some apprehensions are felt that the loss by frost will be large. A few days will determine, and may have a material effect on the price. In any event there will be potatoes for export, and the price in other markets will determine the price here.

PORK.—Small quantities remain on hand, and sell readily at 14 cts. per lb. Some farmers continue to sell their own packing as low as 10 to 12 cts. to their employees, because unwilling to encourage high prices, even for their own profit.

BUTTER.—Nominally butter is worth 25 cts., but there is little for sale at any price, and some who are making small quantities for sale, choose to part with it at a less price.

LARD.—Lard is nominal at 14 cts., and little on the market.

EGGS.—Fresh eggs are abundant at 19 cts., with a downward tendency.

WOOD.—Steamboat wood, near the wharves, sells at $1.75 to $2.00, and the quantity is larger than any past season, and of excellent quality. It is understood that the trade will open at $2.25 to the boats. We have made considerable efforts to ascertain the quantity got out on all the Islands, but without any satisfactory result. It is reported that there is an increased supply on both the Manitou Islands. At Beaver there is a material increase, and so far as we have been able to make personal observations, an improvement in the quality. Five wharves will be in the wood trade at Beaver, and we presume two at North Manitou, and one at South.

HAY.—There is a supply of hay at $12 to $20 per ton, and of coarse fodder for cattle at easier rates. The supply is abundant.

FISH.—The quantity of fish wintered here by the traders for the spring market is not as large as usual, and they have purchased very few during the winter. The quantity in the hands of the fishermen is, on the contrary, unprecedentedly large.

SHINGLES.—The supply on hand is very small, and the demand for home consumption large. Nominally good shingles are worth $2.50 per m, but they cannot be had to supply the home trade at that price.

STAVES.—There is not a stock of staves for one tenth the summer wants. Within six weeks after fishing commences barrels will be made of what is now growing timber, and they are likely to be difficult to obtain at that. Many have depended on a supply from Lake Mormon, but are all destined to disappointment. There is not a stave there for sale, and but an indifferent supply for the three shops at that place. Timber suitable for staves is very scarce there.

HOOPS.—Hoops are very scarce. If the shops were all in operation there would hardly be a supply for a week, and very few are coming forward.

COOPERAGE.—The cooper shops have been generally closed through the winter, and there is little cooperage on hand, and a great deficit in workmen and stocks. If the seine fishing should open well, a few days would realize a scarcity. Half barrels will be in demand much faster than they can be made here. They now sell at 56cts, but are likely to go up to 63 very early in the season. The deficit will be supplied from Green Bay and Saint Clair.

SAWED LUMBER.—The supply of boards, plank and scantling is next to none. The buildings already projected, will require importation. At the steam-mill a very little has been made, but spring does not find 10 m, for sale. The mill on Big River will not run till a spring fresh; the supply of logs is not sufficient to keep it running, and the lumber sawed there will be brought forward at considerable expense.

HORSES.—Team horses are in request, at $125, to $150, a head. Mules at $100 to $125.

CATTLE.—Working oxen rate at $100, to $150 a pair, and are in demand. Cows $38 to $45, and not likely to fall.

WANT OF LABOURERS.—Labour is in greater demand than we have ever seen it. Wages have continually advanced, but with the advance comes no relief. It is next to impossible to hire men at any price. Possibly a half dozen persons may be seen lounging around, complaining of want of employ. At the same time a score of employers are offering unusually high wages for any number of labourers, and unable to get them. The work is not severe. Workmen are so much in demand that they generally have very much their own way.

Fishermen, of good habits, will be able to engage at $25 per month, for the season, and raw hands $16 to $20, and found. Wood choppers, by the cord, will clear still higher wages. Prices range from 75 cents to $1.13 per cord. Farmers find the difficulty of hiring so great that they will generally let their land on shares. Industrious men, who understand making staves, shingles and hoops, can probably realize $1.50 per day, while present rates continue.

POLYGAMY IN CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

There has lately appeared a work on India, written by David E. Allen, D. D., Missionary of the American Board for twenty-five years in India. A notice of this work in Zion's Herald, a Methodist newspaper published in Boston, calls attention to the following passage in it on the subject of polygamy, as indulged in by the converted members of the Indian missionary churches:

"Now what shall be done in respect to such persons (polygamists) when they give credible evidence of personal piety and seek admission into the Christian Church?—No case of this kind occurred in my own missionary experience.—But some cases have occurred in India, and this difficulty will occur in numerous instances in the progress of the gospel. The subject will also have the consideration and decision of the highest authority, ecclesiastical and judiciary, in India and England. My opinion is that the general practice in missions in respect to such cases will be as follows:

When any man who has more than one wife to whom lawfully he has been married, wishes to be admitted into the Christian Church, he will be required to make a free and full statement of his domestic relations. He will be permitted to retain his marital connection with all his wives, and his parental relation to all his children, subject to the discipline of the Church for the proper government of his household. Whether he may or may not cohabit with his different wives will be left, I believe, entirely to him and to them, to act according to their views of duty. At the same time the nature of the married relation, according to the Christian dispensation and the usage of the Church, and the reason why such cases are for a while tolerated, will be fully explained. No man thus admitted while a polygamist, can be ordained a Christian teacher. In this way polygamy will have the testimony of the Church against it; and as no Christian man can ever become a polygamist, all such cases will cease with the lives of those thus admitted."

Nor is this merely the speculation of Dr. Allen as to what would be proper to be done. It appears from a document in the appendix to his book that the subject has come under the consideration of the Calcutta Missionary Conference, composed of the missionaries sustained in that vicinity by the various sects of England and America, and including Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists and Congregationalists, and after frequent consultations and much consideration, they came unanimously to the following conclusion:

"If a convert, before becoming a Christian, has married more wives than one, in accordance with the practice of the Jewish and primitive Christian Churches, he shall be permitted to keep them all, but such a person is not eligible to any office in the Church."

We are not aware to what precise extent this decision of the Calcutta Missionaries has received the sanction and approbation of our American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; but so far as it has been sanctioned by them and those who contribute to their funds, they do not seem to be in a very favourable position for opposing, on the ground of polygamous practices, the admission of Utah into the Union, or the recognition of Mormonism as one of the religious sects of the country, with all the rights, privileges and immunities generally claimed by these sects, and conceded as appertaining unto them.

If polygamy, and the continual practice of it, affords no ground for refusing to those who give other "credible evidence of personal piety" admission into our missionary churches, how can it be made an objection to admitting Utah and the Mormons into our political and religious fellowship and brotherhood? If this converted Mohammedan and that converted Hindoo may still be kept with safety to their souls and without scandal to their brethren, their ten or twenty wives a piece, on what principle is the same privilege to be denied to Brigham Young or Parley P. Pratt? As to the restriction "that such a person is not eligible to any office in the church," that might not go down in Utah; but we apprehend that here in New York, the "Free Lovers," if they can only obtain the indorsement of the Churches and admission into them, will readily, by way of affording some union to the troubled conscience of their indulgent and accommodating brethren, forego for the present all claims and pretension to the office of ministers and deacons.

I will, however, doubtless be alleged by those who adopt and defend the decision of the Calcutta missionaries, that a clear distinction exists between temporarily tolerating an admitted evil with the design and intention speedily to get rid of it, and the introduction of that evil where it has once been abolished. And these same persons will also be likely to insist that for the sake of making converts and extending the area of the church some things must be put up with for a while in India that cannot for a moment be allowed in America. There is a certain plausibility in this reasoning. Yet how loud have been the outcries raised against the Catholic missionaries for having fallen in with and humored the heathen ideas and habits of their converts, with a view of using those ideas and habits as a stepping-stone to Christianity? At the same time, is it not the fact, that however far in this matter the Catholic missionaries may have gone, yet never have they gone so far as to sanction polygamy in their converts?

Nor is the experience of the Church here in America, in a case quite parallel, at all favourable to the view entertained by the missionaries that polygamy, once recognized and sustained as compatible with church membership, is, by virtue of the simultaneous testimony of the Church against it, going to "cease" with the lives of the first converts. What, we beg leave respectfully to ask, has been the experience of the American Churches under a precisely similar operation—that of uttering the testimony of the Church against Slavery, and at the same time admitting slaveholders, "when they give credible evidence of personal piety," to seek and to obtain "admission into the Christian Churches?"

Take the case of the Methodists for example. Wesley began by denouncing Slavery as the "sum of all villainies," and by the early discipline of the Methodist Church, slaveholders could not be admitted into that communion. Before many years, however, influenced doubtless by much the same sort of reasoning relied upon and the same sort of hopes entertained by the Calcutta Missionaries, slaveholders did get admission into the Methodist Church—though some rule or usage still existed, by way of testimony against Slavery, that no slaveholder should be a preacher or a bishop. And what has been the result of this temporising policy? Did slaveholding in the Methodist Church die out under it?

Every body knows on the contrary, that slaveholding has split the Church into halves—that the slaveholders indignant at the Church's testimony against Slavery, have seceded and set up a Church of their own, by which no such testimony is uttered, and in which to be a slaveholder is no disqualification for the highest preferments. The experience of the Presbyterian Church is precisely similar.

The recent attempt in the Cherokee Nation, defeated only by the veto of John Ross, to silence the testimony of the Missionary Churches there against Slavery, is precisely in point. Is it not reasonable to expect that similar results will happen in India, and that polygamy, from being tolerated in the churches as an admitted evil, will come in the end as slavery now has, to be recognized as a positive good, expressly sanctified by the word of God?—N. Y. Tribune.

The Tribune might have added, that this same question of polygamy has worked its own solution among the civilized Indians of America, and is at this time as firmly seated in the Christian Churches there as in the Mohammedan Mosques at Constantinople.

Among the most civilized tribes, those west of Arkansas, who are quite in advance of their white neighbours in general intelligence, nearly all the influential men have several wives, and a Church which should refuse membership on that ground, would not last a month.

CAUSES OF DIVORCE.

In some of the States as many as ten different causes of divorce are recognized, and we find in the statutes of all the different States taken together as many as thirty-three such causes, viz: adultery; abandonment from one to five years; abandonment and living in adultery; cruelty endangering life; pregnancy at or before marriage; impotence; consanguinity or affinity; extreme cruelty; (in Ohio spitting in a wife's face has been decided to be extreme cruelty;) prior existing marriage; idiocy or lunacy; habitual drunkenness; gross neglect of duty; and behaviour repugnant to the marriage contract; neglect to provide sustenance for the wife; nonage; force or fraud; confinement in the State Prison; intolerable severity; absence for a certain time, being unheard of; marriage with a negro, mulatto, or Indian; joining Shakers; condemnation for felony; commission of any crime after marriage punishable with imprisonment in State Prison; intolerable indignities; vagrancy; where parties cannot live in peace; refusal to remove to the State after the husband has become a resident; excesses; ill-treatment or outrages; fleeing beyond the State; being charged with an infamous crime of which the party is guilty; habitual indulgence in ungovernable temper; excessive vicious conduct and abandonment; treatment endangering life or reason; any cause in the discretion of the court.

The statutes of the various States on the subject of divorce, taken together, exhibit perhaps more vagueness, tautology, ignorance, carelessness, and ambiguity than in any other department of legislation. There is no branch of jurisprudence which it is more necessary to have harmonized into one system; yet there is not one in the whole range of legal science where such a conflict of principles and such incongruity of decisions exist. A divorce is often granted in one State that is not legal in another; consequently, a man may be divorced in Ohio, and still be married in New York.

If he re-marries, this new marriage is illegal here and legal there; his children of the second marriage are bastards here, but the moment they cross the line into Ohio they become legitimate. His first wife is entitled to dower here, and his second wife is entitled there. After his death, should the first wife seize his effects in Ohio, and his second wife take them from here, they would be treated by the courts of the respective States as trespassers and thieves.

In fact, were the boundaries of these States coterminous, and if the husband wished to indulge in a spice of polygamy, he may build a house with a wing in each State, and live with his first wife a week in New York, and then with his other wife a week in Ohio; but should the women, not being well versed in law or geography, exchange houses for a moment, both might be arrested for vagrants and prostitutes, and the husband held liable, in both States as a bigamist.

—N. Y. Tribune.

MANNA SUGAR.

The following interesting letter was handed over to the Commissioner of Patents, by Dr. Bernhisel. It is from Mr. Aaron Daniels, who resides in Provo City, Utah Territory, and is dated August 11, 1855:

"According to agreement, I send you a small cake of the sugar made from the syrup or honey found on cottonwood trees, and, as you requested, will give you a few particulars concerning the manner in which I discovered it. As I passed along to and from my cornfield (which is situated about one mile from town) I discovered a white substance on the cottonwood trees, which, upon examination, I found to be a sweet substance, somewhat resembling the honey-dew in the States, but in far greater abundance, and possessing other properties, some of the cakes being as thick as a knife-blade or window-glass. I thought, from the quantity there was on the trees, that sugar might be made of it, and signified the same to a number of my neighbours, who all ridiculed the idea; so I thought I would try and see what I could do with it. I took home two bushels, and washed the twigs, and then strained and boiled down the water, which made one and a quarter pounds of sugar. Since that, most of the town have been at work. Some families have made as high as 100 pounds of sugar. It makes excellent molasses, and as good vinegar as I ever saw. I averaged about eighteen pounds a day with two three-gallon kettles."

Although the quantity of sugar made from this syrup is small, yet we are assured that it is still profitable, from the fact that sugar in that region of country is worth forty cents a pound.—Washington Union.

A MAID OF HONOUR IN AMERICA.

Letters from the United States, Cuba, and Canada: By the Hon. Amelia M. Murray. 12mo., pp. 402, G. P. Putnam & Co.

We are not accurately informed as to the precise functions of a "maid of honour" to Queen Victoria—from which exalted sphere the Hon. Miss Murray vouchsafes to make an avatar into the benighted regions of democratic America—but they certainly require no remarkable intellectual endowments, nor even the degree of cultivation requisite to the composition of a lively, agreeable letter.

But here is her observations on Polygamy. On her introduction to Mr. Bernhisel, the Utah delegate in Congress, she relapses into her unrivaled vein of philosophical reflection, presenting a quite original view of the inherent connection between democracy and polygamy.—He is "a gentlemanly, respectable-looking old man with a bald head. I did not inquire if he has twelve wives; but an amusing account has been given me with regard to the domestic arrangements of that strange people. It seems that when the first wife wants help in the household, she petitions her husband to take another spouse—a good cook or a dairywoman for instance, or a seamstress—so one wife is housekeeper, another has the cooking department, a third manages the nursery, and so forth; and as there is no small difficulty in getting good servants in the United States, this matrimonial plan ensures a more permanent and better ordered household than could be obtained without it. I am informed that the domestic troubles of a wife in the United States are such that, unless she resides in the slave countries, she thinks it far more convenient to be the first wife; with half-a-dozen subordinate ones, than to be sole darling with the disadvantages of saucy servants and the discomforts of bad dinners; so that, in fact, Republicanism, and an unnatural attempt at equality, has caused a return of the terrible evils of polygamy. What a curious result. I hope this strange custom will not spread over the Union."

BOOKS FOR SALE.

The following publications are constantly for sale at this office, and will be sent by mail, free of postage, on receipt of the prices herein named:

The "Prophetic Discussion," being a full examination of the evidences of the Prophetick callings of Brigham Young and James J. Strang. 44 pages. Quarto. Price, 20 cents.

The "New Dispensation," eight letters, by Oliver Cowdery. Quarto. Price, 20 cents.

The "Diamond, or Law of Prophetick Succession." 20 pages. 8 vo. Price 5 cents.

We shall issue in May next "Sacred Hymns," a small volume, selected for the use of the Latter Day Saints. 172 pages. Price, in fine morocco binding, 50 cents.

This is printed, folded and ready for the binder.

Also, the "Law of the Lord," being a translation from the Egyptian of the Law given to Moses in Sinai, with numerous and valuable notes. 320 to 350 pages. 8 vo. Price, in calf, $2.00.

The printing of this work is about three-fourths done, and will be ready for the binder during the current month, and for the market before the end of May.

(Continued from second page.)

that he copied it. 4th. If Lambdin had it, it is so improbable that Rigdon ever saw or heard of it, as to be next to a certainty that he did not. 5th. If Rigdon had it, it is impossible that he ever transferred it to Joseph Smith, or ever heard of him, until after the translation of the Book of Mormon.

50. Complete as is this failure, every subsequent writer has, for want of any other means of attack, fallen back on this. But it is marvellous, how men in high standing have filled up with their own assertions every defect in the chain of evidence, and lopped off every contradiction and inconsistency; reserving to themselves as much of the lie as had the semblance of truth, and adding what was necessary to perfect the falsehood.

GUNNISON'S HISTORY OF THE MORMONS.

51. Gunnison, in his History of the Mormons, (p. 94.) says, that when the "Manuscript Found" was put in the hands of Lambdin, the printer, "Sidney Rigdon was employed to edit it for the press." No writer, no witness had ever asserted this; but it was necessary to make out the case, and he volunteered the falsehood, not knowing the fact, that at that time Rigdon was only a farmer's boy of fifteen, and that it was Engles instead of Lambdin who had the manuscript.

52. In the attempt, however, to show that the boy Joe had such a reputation as a money digger, at Palmyra, New York, that Rigdon, at Pittsburgh, four hundred miles away, heard of him, and intrusted to him the scheme of founding a new religion, Gunnison breaks down and admits it incredible. (Gunnison's History of the Mormons, p. 94.)

53. Gunnison then asserts, that from 1817, to 1820, the trunk supposed to contain the manuscript was at the house of the widow Spaulding's "brother, in Onondaga Hollow, [Onondaga county, New York,] near the residence of the Smiths; [Palmyra, Wayne county, New York,] Wayne and Onondaga counties being separated by a narrow township of land." (Gunnison's History of the Mormons, p. 95.)

54. Now, it is a fact that the whole breadth of Cayuga county lies between Onondaga on the east, and Wayne on the west; that Onondaga Hollow is in the east part of Onondaga county, and Palmyra, the residence of the Smiths, in the west part of Wayne, making the residence of Smith some eighty miles from Onondaga Hollow. As Smith was but twelve years old at that time, the inference of Gunnison that he smelled out a manuscript eighty miles off, and stole and laid it by to use in founding a new religion, at some future day, is not very forcible. He would need a revelation, at least, to guide him in finding it.

55. But Gunnison's premises are fatal in still another point. He locates Spaulding's manuscript at Onondaga Hollow, from 1817 to 1820, (History of the Mormons, p. 95,) during all which time the Smith family, according to Howe, lived at Royalton, Vermont, (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 11,) two hundred and eighty miles from Onondaga Hollow. If Howe's authority is not good for the residence of the Smiths, it is not for the Spaulding story. If it is, Gunnison's conclusions are worse than worthless.

56. Though Howe's History of Mormonism, which Gunnison principally followed, almost shows Spaulding's manuscript in Howe's hands, the letter of Spaulding's widow, published in the newspapers generally, from 1839 to 1842, showed that she had it in her possession from her husband's death till Hurlburt, the agent of Howe, came after it, in 1834, and that her daughter, and other friends in Monson, were in the habit of reading it, down till that time; and leaves the reader with the impression that she delivered it to Hurlburt, for Howe's use; and the testimony of both the widow and daughter, published in the Quincy Whig, and extensively republished, most positively asserts that it was so delivered to Hurlburt, on an agreement to publish it, and that they received a letter from those having it in charge that they should not publish it, because it did not read as they expected; Gunnison ventures the assertion that, ever since the Book of Mormon appeared, the "Manuscript Found" has been the manuscript lost; and apparently oppressed with his own theory, that Smith at the age of twelve had been inspired with the knowledge of its existence in an old trunk eighty miles away, and stolen it; still guesses that by accident or design it got into Smith's hands in some way. (Gunnison's History of the Mormons, p. 95.)

57. The testimony of both the widow and daughter that the manuscript of Spaulding was only about one quarter as large as the printed Book of Mormon, and, therefore, contained but about one twentieth the reading matter, neither Howe, Gunnison or any other writer has noticed.

58. But Gunnison claims, that, notwithstanding the barbarous style of language in which the Book of Mormon is rendered, it is really a work of genius of the highest order. (Gunnison's History of the Mormons, pp. 95, 96.) One eighteenth, he says, is copied from the Bible. If the whole of Spaulding's manuscript was copied into it, it would make but one twentieth, and something like nine tenths would remain the work of Smith. A little singular it is that the unlettered Joe and the learned Solomon Spaulding should have the same mastery and commanding genius, and write in the same barbarous style.

FORD'S HISTORY OF ILLINOIS.

59. Governor Ford, in his History of Illinois, jumps over all the difficulties, and without pretending to any information beyond what Howe's History contains, makes the sweeping and unsupported assertion that "Rigdon had become possessed of a religious romance, written by a Presbyterian Clergyman, in Ohio, then dead, which suggested the idea of starting a new religion. It was agreed that Joe Smith should be put forward as Prophet; and the two devised the story that golden plates had been found, containing a record inscribed on them in unknown characters, which, when deciphered by the power of inspiration, gave the history of the ten lost tribes of Israel." (Ford's History of Illinois, p. 252.)

60. Not a new witness is introduced; not a new fact is ascertained. No attempt is made to trace either Smith or Rigdon one step of the way over the three hundred miles of country between them. No attempt is made to show how Rigdon in Pittsburgh, heard of the boy Joe, whose fame for money digging extended throughout a quarter of the township of Manchester,* in central New York; or how he learned of the preacher Rigdon, who, as a Baptist preacher, was known for near twenty miles out of Pittsburgh, in southwestern Pennsylvania. None of these little particulars trouble the Governor in his attempt to blacken the fame of the Prophet, the easier to vindicate the crime of conniving at his murder.

61. Conjectures, of which he could not possibly know anything, which other men had for twenty years ransacked half the continent to find some evidence of, he simply asserts as though they were unquestionable facts.

62. Like most men who bear false witness, he has made his falsehood patent. The Book of Mormon does not contain "the history of the ten lost tribes," as he asserts; as any one will see by reading the book; and whoever will assert such a falsehood, when the truth is so easily known, whether from carelessness or corruption, is not a safe historian, on disputed questions, of which he has no personal knowledge.

ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF THE MORMONS.

63. The anonymous author of the Illustrated History of the Mormons, though more just than most writers on that side, falls into the common and unsupported falsehood, by saying that Rigdon was a "compositor," that is, a type setter, (p. 45,) but without one word of evidence to justify the assertion.

64. The same author falls in with the general fame of the Spaulding story, without investigating it, and says, "Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon seem to have acted in concert in its concoction, from materials thus prepared for them." (Illustrated History of the Mormons, p. 49.) This book was written in England, though published by Derby and Miller, Auburn, New York, and as it is not characterized with the usual virulence, possibly the author had only heard the general statement of the Spaulding story, without those details which utterly overthrow it.

* Manchester, Ontario county, adjoining Palmyra, Wayne county, and was part of the time the place of Smith's residence.

65. In the same manner he is led to say, that "anachronisms are frequent" in the Book of Mormon; (Illustrated History of Mormonism, p. 49;) though not a single one is pointed out, for the best reason in the world; none exists. This fact does not rest on testimony, but can be tested at any time by an examination of the book.

HOWE'S GREAT WEST.

66. Henry Howe published, at Cincinnati, in 1854, a "History of the Great West," in which he revives the Spaulding story, with the theory that Rigdon first heard of Joseph Smith as a vagabond money digger, subsequent to 1827, when Rigdon was a Campbellite preacher, in Mentor, Ohio, and Smith resided near Palmyra, New York.

67. No evidence is offered that Rigdon had the Spaulding manuscript, or that he had ever heard of Smith. The only attempt to show either of these things possible, is the statement that "Rigdon was frequently absent." (Great West, p. 337.)

68. As Rigdon did not go to Mentor till after Smith was engaged on the Book of Mormon, the suggestion that he there heard of him, and on the faith of his vagabond character, entrusted him with the commission of sole founder of a new religion, of which Rigdon was to come in as junior partner, after the first rugged paths were trod, comes too late.

69. And against the suggestion that Rigdon heard of him at all, till the publication of the Book of Mormon, in the newspapers, is the fact that Mentor, Ohio, is two hundred and thirty miles from Palmyra or Manchester, New York, and in the twenty-two years search which has been made for some evidence of a possible collusion between Smith and Rigdon, previous to the publication of the Book of Mormon, not a witness has been produced who could show that any person residing twenty miles from Smith ever heard of him till the announcement, through the newspapers, of the publication of that book.

70. That Rigdon, as a Campbellite preacher at Mentor, was occasionally absent from home, is too probable to require any proof; but that that fact, equally true of every Christian minister, convicts him of stealing manuscripts to found a new religion on, or of dealing with vagrant money diggers, hundreds of miles away, is a new rule of evidence, to which all other Christian ministers will object.

71. The town of Mentor is only five miles from the town of Kirtland, and Rigdon was the minister of the Campbellite Churches in both towns, and after receiving the faith of the Latter Day Saints, remained at Kirtland till 1837; and till 1848 was prominently connected with all the public discussions of that faith. Had he at any time previous to the publication of the Book of Mormon made a journey from Mentor to Palmyra, and stopped with Joseph long enough to commit to him the charge of founding a new religion, and the reconstruction of the Spaulding manuscript into an oracle of God, why has no one of the Campbellites about Mentor and Kirtland any knowledge of his going to Palmyra, or of his being absent on some unknown journey, long enough to have accomplished that work?

72. For twenty-two years, since the Spaulding story was first promulgated, as far as Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon have been preached, all Christendom has looked earnestly and with painful anxiety for some such proof, and have looked in vain. Had he made a single journey from Mentor, in which he could not be traced step by step, and his employment proved day by day, so as to show the impossibility of his having visited the Seat of Palmyra, that absence would have been announced, and proclaimed the triumph of his accusers.

73. It is obvious that Henry Howe had not investigated the matter at all, but only followed common fame, guessing his way through difficulties, which were apparent on the face of E. D. Howe's History of Mormonism. His theory of the plagiarism of the Book of Mormon, is built on the exploded work of E. D. Howe, altered, but not improved, by his own guessing.

FERRIS' UTAH AND THE MORMONS.

74. Of all the writers who have given currency to the Spaulding story, the most able and at the same time the most unscrupulous and corrupt, is Benjamin C. Ferris, late Secretary of Utah, author of a book entitled, "Utah and the Mormons." Ferris not only repeats the old exploded lie, that Rigdon was a printer, but says that at the time Spaulding's manuscript was in Patterson and Lambdin's printing office, Rigdon "was in the employment of Patterson, and became so much interested in the 'Manuscript Found' as to copy it, 'as he himself has frequently stated.'" (Utah and the Mormons, p. 82.)

75. Such unblushing falsehood it would be difficult elsewhere to find. At the date of Ferris' publication, the Spaulding story had been twenty years published. Every effort in the power of man had been made to show the "Manuscript Found" in Rigdon's possession, or where he might possibly have seen it, and so far in vain. Rigdon had presided over a Church of three thousand Latter Day Saints, in Pittsburgh; and in the anxiety to destroy his influence, the Rev. Mr. Williams, pastor of a Church in Pittsburgh, aided by the whole clergy, had published a work for the purpose of fastening this plagiarism on Rigdon; and not a witness could be found to say that Rigdon was a printer; not a witness that he was ever in Patterson and Lambdin's office; not a witness that he was ever in Pittsburgh, while that printing office existed; and not a witness that he ever saw or heard of either Spaulding or his manuscript, previous to the publication of "Mormonism Unveiled," in 1824.

76. But that is not the darkest feature in this allegation of Mr. Ferris. In saying that Rigdon "became so much interested in the 'Manuscript Found' as to copy it," "as he himself has frequently stated," including the last six words in quotations, as though he had copied them from some other writer, Ferris is guilty both of a known falsehood, and an unblushing forgery. (Utah and the Mormons, p. 82.)

77. No man on earth had ever so written. Ferris did not copy his quoted words from any other writer, and it is patent on the pages of his book that he had read and was familiar with those words, on this question, in which Rigdon and his friends have continually denied that Rigdon ever saw or heard of Spaulding, or his manuscript, earlier than 1834, and challenged the world to produce one word of proof against him.

78. Pursuing this course of falsehood, even when truth would seem to serve his purpose just as well, Ferris accounts for the meagreness of the evidence against Smith and Rigdon, by asserting the death of Patterson in 1826, four years before the publication of the Book of Mormon. (Utah and the Mormons, p. 82.)

79. Yet the Rev. S. Williams published, in the city of Pittsburgh, the residence of Patterson, in the year 1842, a pamphlet entitled, "Mormonism Exposed," containing a certificate concerning this same Spaulding manuscript, signed by this same Robert Patterson, and dated April 21, 1842. And John E. Page, then residing in Pittsburgh, in Apostolic charge of the Latter Day Saints, and abundantly able and disposed to expose Williams, if he introduced any false testimonies, published a pamphlet in reply, and admits Patterson's certificate into his work without question. Patterson was living, and a prominent citizen of Pittsburgh sixteen years after Ferris writes him dead. And no writer, no man, before Ferris, said he was dead. Ferris is the original author of the falsehood. And this fact does not rest on the assumption of any man. If he had any authority, he has but to produce it. There is none.

80. But with his unscrupulous corruption, Ferris was too shrewd not to see that the theory which says that Rigdon heard of Smith's fame as a money digger, three or four hundred miles away, and looked him up as a suitable person to employ, to found a new religion, was ridiculous; that some new invention was necessary; or, when passion was over, every sane man would reject the wicked impeachment.

81. Drawing upon his imagination alone, and asserting each point as though it was an unquestioned fact in history, Ferris says, "In the course of his wanderings, Smith met with Rigdon. These two men together conceived the idea of starting a system of religious imposture, commensurate with the popular credulity."

82. "Conjointly they possessed, in mercantile phrase, the requisite capital for such an adventure. Smith had cunning, plausible volubility, Seer stones, mysterious antiquities, and, withal, the prestige of success; Rigdon was versed in the lights and shadows of religious verbiage; had some literary pretensions; was a printer; and, above all, had a copy of Spaulding's book."

83. "Which started the bright idea of the golden Bible, is not known; though, in all likelihood, the credit is due to Smith, as he ever after maintained the ascendancy in the new hierarchy. After the plan had assumed a definite form in the minds of the originators, it was easy for Joseph, in his perambulations, to trace out and secure the original manuscript of Spaulding, to guard the intended scheme from exposure." (Utah and the Mormons, pp. 55, 56.)

84. Thus, without spending one moment in inquiry, without even troubling himself to pick up such facts as were in his reach, much less inquiring for evidence, which twenty years of the most industrious research had failed to find, Ferris sits down in his armed chair, and on a half page of foolscap, demonstrates by his unsupported assertion, not only that Rigdon had a copy of the Spaulding manuscript, but that Smith, while hazing around with peep stones, and mineral rods, strayed off from Palmyra, three or four hundred miles, to Pittsburgh, and to look up Rigdon as a partner; as tradition says, the head of a severed snake will look up his eliminated tail, which some mischievous boy has cut off and hidden in the most secret place; but that Smith absolutely traced up the original manuscript, and got possession of that also.

85. Surely, the millions of Christians who had anxiously waited twenty years for some scrap of evidence, that either Smith or Rigdon ever heard of the Spaulding manuscript previous to 1834, ought to be thankful to Ferris, for alleging all they wish to prove, and saving the necessity of evidence. Henceforth no one need trouble himself to prove that Rigdon obtained a copy of the manuscript, for any one can prove by Ferris' falsehood that Smith had the original, without obligation to the copy.

86. Why two men, obscure as Smith and Rigdon, each entertaining the ambition to found a new religion, should curb their zeal, till blindly burrowing like the mole, through the three hundred miles of intervening country, they embraced each other; why the entire task of accomplishing the work should be put upon the most inefficient of the two; why their two minds were so perfectly agreed, that, while one secured a copy, the other secured the original of Spaulding's manuscript, Mr. Ferris must tell; nobody else can.

87. But, why no other writer ever asserted this, why Ferris does not offer one word of proof in support of it, is very plain. Any body can tell that. It is because there is not a word of truth in it.

88. As if to test the gullibility of his readers, and prove how far the Christian world would be satisfied with falsehoods which a schoolboy could detect, so they militated against the divine mission of Joseph Smith, Ferris takes pains to prove that Smith "came into the northern part of Pennsylvania, near the Susquehanna River, in which part his father-in-law resided," and then, to show that Smith might by possibility have found Rigdon there, he adds, "Sidney Rigdon, it will also be recollected, resided in the State of Pennsylvania." (Utah and the Mormons, p. 61.)

89. True, Rigdon did once reside in Pennsylvania, but it was the other side of the Alleghany mountains, and by the nearest road, measuring around the mountains and through their gorges, more than four hundred miles distant, and he had removed still further off into the State of Ohio, before Smith went into Pennsylvania at all. (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 289.)

90. Pursuing his investigations with unblushing naivety and consummate skill, Ferris takes over every document he can find, whether forged or genuine, supplying every apparent lack by his own trifling invention, and laying especial stress upon every exhibition of passion of any of the disciples of Joseph Smith, during a period of a quarter of a century, to impeach the moral characters of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon; and sums up, that by their enemies they were held "very much below par;" and that among themselves a petulant editor, on some disagreement, called Martin Harris a lackey; and that when Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer had some business connection with the set of men who expelled the Saints from Missouri, Rigdon accused them with being "connected with agents of thieves, counterfeiters, bars and black-legs, of the deepest die." (Utah and the Mormons, pp. 68, 69.)

91. This is the same set of men who, in 1838, expelled the Latter Day Saints from Missouri, and in 1841 invaded Kansas, for the purpose of expelling the free State men; David R. Atchison, late member and President of the United States Senate, being the leader in both forays. And though Atchison's men in either case stopped at no crime, it is certain that many men of the highest standing in the United States have had much more connection with them than Cowdery and Whitmer were accused of, in those hours of peril in which they were unfortunately separated from their brethren.

92. A fact worth the rest is, that in all those changes which separated the early ministers of this persecuted faith, even when Joseph and many of his faithful brethren were in prison, and the dried bones of others lying around unburied, and Cowdery and Whitmer in the camp of their persecutors, they still gave the same unvarying testimony of the divine authority of the dispensation, and the Book of Mormon; both relating circumstantially, on oath, in a Missouri court, forced and browbeaten by a Missouri mob, the fact of the exhibition of the plates to them according to their testimony in the Book of Mormon.

93. And Cowdery, under the same circumstances, knowing that he was cast out and hated by his brethren as a traitor, who had joined their enemies and imperiled their lives, testified, on his solemn oath, that Joseph and himself did receive the Priesthood on two different occasions, by the voice of God, and the hands of Angels; relating circumstantially the time and manner of it; knowing well, when he did so, that the Missouri mob would turn against him more bitterly than his brethren had, and that the best hope which remained for him, was to live secretly for his life.

94. Though most of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon were, one time and another, separated from the Church, not one of them ever drew back from his testimony, or departed from the faith; and notwithstanding the violent hatred engendered by internal discord among brethren, which grew up against some of them at the time of their separation, they have all lived down scandal and reproach, and by their irreproachable lives have established an unimpeachable reputation for integrity and truth, both among Saints and Gentiles.

95. The reputation of Joseph, as a money digger, and a peep stone seer, originated in falsehood, and has been kept up for the purpose of ridiculing his calling to the Prophetic office. The truth about it is, that as a day labourer he was employed at wages to dig, not for enchanted treasures, but for money, which tradition said some Spaniards had buried in the bank of the Susquehanna River. (Gunnison's History of the Mormons, p. 32. Pratt's Ancient American Records.)

96. The various jokes about money digging, which from this fact passed between him and his early associates, were industriously gathered up by Philastus Hurlburt, duly cabellized and made a part of Howe's "History of Mormonism;" and the allusions there accumulated, if they prove anything, prove only ignorance, superstition, and the most venial offences, of which the witnesses bring in themselves for the largest share, and leave the reader with the impression that if what they say of Smith is really true, he was rather guilty of an occasional practical joke on their superstition, than of any participation in it.

97. Nothing is more evident, notwithstanding the pains taken to conceal it, than that many of them believed Joseph had the plates from which he professed to be translating; and one of the witnesses, Willard Chase, testifies that, notwithstanding Joseph's anxiety to make his possession of the plates a secret, as many as twelve men did get to see them. (Howe's History of Mormonism, p. 245.) And many of the witnesses who testify that he was not a man of truth, show, nevertheless, that they and others did credit him in matters which, to say the least of it, were a severe tax on one's credulity.

A FUGITIVE SLAVE FROM A VIRGINIA CHURCH.

To run away from Slavery has been declared to be, to run away from God. The "Church of Jesus Christ at Union, Fauquier county, Virginia," has pronounced excommunication against one of its members for running away from his master and seeking Freedom in the North. This negro who so "disobeyed the laws of God and man," in the language of that "Church of Jesus Christ," was caught, and by the active endeavours of President Pierce and his agents, and the agents of Cotton and Doughfacery, was restored to the Christian Society of Union and the pious master who bewailed his slave's backsliding into Freedom and Massachusetts. After a season of repentance under the exhortations of the rawhide and the Rev. John Clark, this fugitive church member was bought out of Slavery with Northern dollars and presented to himself. Taking the gift, he straightway went with it to Oberlin, Ohio, to educate it for the ministry. Arrived there, he wrote back to Union to his old pastor for a letter of dismission from the church he so wickedly ran away from when he ran away from Slavery. The pastor, the Reverend John Clark, made answer, of which the following is the gist:

"The church of Jesus Christ, at Union, Fauquier County, Va.:

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

Whereas, Anthony Burns, a member of the church, has made application to us by letter to our pastor, for a letter of dismission in fellowship, in order that he may unite with another church of the same faith and order; and

Whereas, it has been satisfactorily established before us that the said Anthony Burns absconded from the service of his master, and refused to return voluntarily, thereby disobeying both the laws of God and man, although he subsequently obtained his freedom by purchase, yet we have now to consider him only as a fugitive from labour, (as he was before his arrest and restoration to his master,) have, therefore,

Resolved, unanimously, That he be excommunicated from the communion and fellowship of this church.

Done by order of this church, in regular church meeting, this 26th day of October, 1855.

W. W. West, Clerk."

With this bull of excommunication went a letter from the pastor, which pitches into poor Burns in a fashion which would be called diabolically vicious, if it did not proceed from a clergyman. He convicts him, logically and from the Scriptures, of having denied the Christian character in seeking freedom while his master wanted him to remain a slave—recommends him when licensed to preach, to select for his field of labour the north bank of the Ohio River, and taking the text about Onesimus, to exhort therefrom all fugitives from Virginia to run straight back to their masters. "By so doing," adds the pastor, "you may measurably make amends for the expenditures of $30,000 by the Government in your arrest, trial, and restoration to your legal master."

If the "Church of Jesus Christ in Union, Fauquier County, Virginia," is losing members by the indulgent love of Freedom, is it not largely growing in grace?—Alb. Eve. Journal.

It is noteworthy that Burns is not excommunicated for fleeing from bondage, but for accepting freedom as the gift, of the friends who purchased him, after he had been reclaimed and reduced to slavery again. The Church of Christ at Union, Fauquier county, Va., hold him a fugitive for accepting liberty as a gift, and declare the preference of liberty to slavery by a preacher of the gospel, (for such was Anthony Burns in their Church,) a crime meriting excommunication from the fellowship of the brethren. In the annals of heathenism, nothing so atrocious is found.

"Overcome evil with good," as the gentleman said when he knocked down a burglar with a family Bible.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. VI.—NO. 4.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1856.

WHOLE NO. 87.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

AT SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,
LAKE MICHIGAN, BY

COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms.—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to Cooper & Chidester, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time, will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation, in winter, the ISLANDER will be sent to mail-subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether or many are issued within the year or not.

LUTHER ON POLYGAMY.

(From Mischele's Life of Luther.)

We noticed at an early period of this narrative, the melancholy state of dependence in which the Reformation was placed on the princes that espoused the cause. Luther had time to foresee the result. These princes were men, with men's caprices and passions; and hence concessions, which, without being contrary to the principles of the Reformation, seemed to redound little to the honour of the reformers. The most warlike of these princes, the hot-headed landgrave of Hesse, submitted to Luther and the Protestant ministers, that his health would not allow of his confining himself to one wife. His instructions to Bucer for the negotiation of this matter with the theologians of Wittenburg, are a curious mixture of sensuality, of religious fears, and daring simplicity. "Ever since I have been married," he writes, "I have lived in adultery and fornication; and as I won't give up this way of living, I cannot present myself at the holy table; for St. Paul has said, that the adulterer shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." He proceeds to state the reasons which drive him into this course: "My wife is neither good-looking nor good-tempered; she is not sweet; she drinks, and my chamberlains can tell what she then does, &c. I am of a warm complexion, as the physicians can prove; and as I often attend the imperial diets, where the body is pampered with high living, how am I to manage there without a wife, especially as I can't be always taking a seaglio about with me?"

"How can I punish fornication, and other crimes, when all may turn round and say, 'master, begin with yourself?' Were I to take up arms for the Gospel's sake I could only do so with a troubled conscience, for I should say to myself, If you die in this war, you go to the devil. I have read both the Old and New Testament carefully, and find no other help indicated than to take a second wife; and I ask before God, why cannot I do what Abraham, Jacob, David, Lamech, and Solomon have done?"

The question of Polygamy had been agitated from the very beginning of Protestantism, which professed to restore the world to Scriptural life; and, whatever his repugnance, Luther durst not condemn the Old Testament. Besides, the Protestants held marriage to be res publica, and subject to the regulations of the civil power. Luther, too, had already held, theoretically, and without advising it to be put in practice, the very doctrine advocated by the landgrave. He had written years before: "I confess I cannot say that polygamy is repugnant to Holy Scripture, yet would not have the practice introduced among Christians, who ought to abstain even from what is lawful, in order to avoid scandal, and in order to maintain that honestas (decorum) which St. Paul requires under all circumstances." (Jan. 13th, 1524.) Polygamy is not allowable among Christians, except in cases of absolute necessity, as when a man is forced to separate from a leprous wife, &c. (March 21st, 1527.) Having one day put the case to Doctor Basilius, whether a man, whose wife was afflicted with some incurable malady, might take a concubine, and receiving an answer in the affirmative, Luther observed, "It would be of dangerous precedent, since excuses might be daily invented for procuring divorce." (A. D. 1539.)

Luther was greatly embarrassed by the landgrave's message. All the theologians of Wittenburg assembled to draw up an answer, and the result was a compromise. He was allowed a double marriage, on condition that his second wife should not be publicly recognized.

Your highness must be aware of the difference between establishing a universal and granting an exceptional law. We cannot publicly sanction a plurality of wives.

We pray your highness to consider the dangers in which a man would stand who should introduce a law that would disunite families, and plunge them into endless lawsuit. Your highness's constitution is weak, you sleep badly, your health requires every care. The great Scanderbeg often exhorted his soldiers to chastity, saying, that nothing was so injurious in their calling as incontinence. We pray your highness seriously to take into consideration the scandals, cares, labours, griefs, and infirmities herein brought under your notice. If, nevertheless, your highness is fully resolved to take a second wife, we are of opinion that the marriage should be secret.

Given at Wittenburg, after the festival of St. Nicholas, 1539.—Martin Luther, Philip Melancthon, Martin Bucer, Antony Corvin, Adam, John Lening, Justin Wintfert, Dyonisus Melanther.

The Treaty of Paris—What is it Worth?

Although the peace which has been just concluded creates, for the moment, a general feeling of satisfaction, we are afraid that this sentiment will not be durable. It is natural that the interests which have been suffering from the war should rejoice at being relieved from its depressing influences; but those who are accustomed to regard political events rather in reference to their future consequence than to their present bearing, fail to see in the Paris treaty the prospect of any permanent settlement of European differences.

The new treaty is in fact little more than a relash of the old political arrangements of Amiens and Tilsit. The leading parties to it have on framing it considered rather their own selfish views than the objects for which they professed to be contending. Turkey has in its provisions been regarded rather as the scape goat of Russian delinquencies, than as the power having a claim to redress. It is her territories that have been pieced and parcelled out, not those of the aggressor.

The Allies have, for instance, secured the right of reorganizing in their own way the Danubian Principalities; and they will do it in a manner to render them virtually independent of the Porte. They are also to take possession of Candia, Smyrna and Trebizonde—the gates to the highways of eastern commerce, and important acquisition for maritime nations like England and France.

In addition to these stipulations, their guarantee of the rights of the Christian subjects of the Sultan will give them the opportunity of interfering at their pleasure in the internal administration of the Ottoman empire. The poor Turk has, in short, been so plucked and shorn by his friends and protectors that it is no wonder that he feels doubtful if they left him anything which he can legitimately call his own.

But the treaty, it is said, is likely to secure the peace of Europe, and remove many of the dangerous questions, which are constantly threatening to disturb it. It will do nothing of the sort.

The treaty of Amiens professed to secure to France the new boundaries she had acquired for herself, to guarantee the integrity of the Ottoman empire, and also the independence of Malta.

Were any of these conditions subsequently fulfilled? Not one. Of the innumerable stipulations of the treaty of Tilsit the same may be said. Dictated by the selfish views of the contracting parties, and having little or no reference to the general interests of humanity, they wanted the element of political vitality. Does the treaty of Paris, just concluded, differ in the elevation and breadth of its views from those instruments? We cannot see it, unless, indeed, it be in the greater selfishness and shortsightedness of the motives that have inspired it.

So much for the security to which the people of Europe appear to be so credulously abandoning themselves. A brief interval of time will, we fear, convince them that it would have been better for their interests if the treaty had never been made. It has, in fact, been too smoothly and rapidly perfected to be anything more than a mere glazing over of difficulties.

If we are correctly informed as to its conditions, it leaves the seeds of enmity and jealousy between the present governments of England and France—the same between Russia and Austria—the same between Turkey and the Allies. It has been brought about in hostility to Palmerston, by the personal and dynastic ideas of Napoleon, acting on Alexander's hatred to Austria and England.

The Czar can never forgive the former for the duplicity and in the latter he sees only a bitter and relentless enemy. Louis Napoleon has got out of England all he wanted—the recognition of his dynasty; and now he does not care how soon the ties that united him to her are cast loose. His efforts to bring about peace on terms that would not be humiliating to the pride of his opponent, have gained the good will of Russia, and also of Austria, who could only foresee peril to herself in the longer continuance of the war.

The three Emperors will try to manage Europe without England, which, as a revolutionary country, with a free press and Parliament, will be completely isolated from this union of despotism, and thrown back upon the United States for moral support. One great power has, however, been ignored by the Conferences and the Paris treaty—the terrible power of revolution. That power, though at present dormant, has as much strength as ever, and is, we believe, as ripe in Turkey as it is in any of the European States.

The English free press and Russian Machiavellian diplomacy will soon stir up this slumbering element. The interests of either power may at any moment wither in the next dozen years let loose upon the European world the torrent of revolutionary violence. The treaty of Paris seems to have been framed to provide opportunities and appliances for such a result. We wish the despots of Europe joy of this precious offspring of their ingenuity. It promises to be as fruitful of evil to them as was Jupiter's gift to Pandora.—N. Y. Herald.

TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1856.

Opening of Navigation.

Sunday the steamer Superior, Capt. Jones, of the Lake Superior Line, made this harbour, from Chicago, and was soon followed by the Louisville, Capt. Caldwell, and the Wisconsin, Capt. Hickey, of the Northern Railroad Line.

They all left Monday to try the ice in the Straits. No indication has been seen that the Straits are yet open, but they are likely to make St. Helena, ready to pass at the first breaking. The Louisville reports twenty miles of field ice above.

No sail has been seen to pass up by here, and we are quite sure the Straits are not opened.

As we go to press there is an immense field of ice on the east shore, filling half the width of the channel.

Beaver Island Light was lit up Monday, the 21st inst.

Waugobance Light was lit up Friday, the 25th inst.

Fields of ice twenty miles in extent were encountered above here Sunday.

Fishermen are getting out on their stations for gill net fishing.

The Mississippi River has been closed its entire length by floating ice the past winter. This fact has never been known to occur before in the memory of man.

MONOGAMY, POLYGAMY, AND CHRISTIANITY.

From the Family Herald.

Monogamy, or single marriage, (that is, marriage to one wife at once,) is an old Roman practice, adopted by the Roman Church, and thus introduced into Christendom. Whether the Apostles taught it or not we cannot say, as St. Paul enjoins it only on bishops, thereby, however, inculcating the propriety of it, without enforcing it as a rule.

No Roman was allowed to have two wives at once, but was liable to be punished for bigamy.

Marc Antony was the first Roman who had two wives. Julius Caesar attempted to have a law passed in favour of polygamy, but could not effect it. It was no doubt owing to this national custom among the Romans, that the early Roman ladies were so distinguished for their personal dignity and propriety of conduct. Woman held a much higher rank among the Jews.

The early Christians so naturally adopted this habit of Roman respectability, that we are apt to ascribe the monogamy of the western world to Christianity; but this is a mistake. There is no evidence of it either in Scripture or in history. Nay it is a well known fact, that even concubinage was sanctioned by the early Church. A man was allowed to keep a concubine without marriage, but not a concubine and a wife together. (See Bingham's Antiquities, Book xvi, c. 11.)

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1856.

STRAITS OPEN.

As we go to Press (30th April morning) sail are seen passing up with a stiff east wind. They must have come through the Straits. The wind sprung up in the east at 1 A. M., and is about an eight knot breeze. This wind probably made the first opening through the ice at Mackinac.

Elder R. F. Mills has had a successful mission in Ohio. He is now in Wisconsin, doing a little business, and is expected here in a few days.

Elders Phineas and Samuel Wright are looked for by the first boat from below, with a company of emigrants from Livingston county, where the Courier has been all winter howling about the Mormons. They consist of a body of substantial farmers, with their families.

The Elders who are returning from their missions, and emigrants coming in, are bringing a considerable number of horses. We suggest to those who believe the Mormons steal horses, send an agent here to inspect them as they arrive.

It is understood that six lines of boats will stop here the present season. The Northern Railroad line, from Ogdensburg to Chicago, the American Transportation Co., the Western Transportation Co.'s line, and Reed's line from Buffalo to Chicago, Newberry's line from Buffalo to Green Bay, and the Chicago and Lake Superior line.

We have not seen the cards of these lines, and do not know their season arrangement. It is said the Collingwood line is abandoned for the present.

There is peace in Europe, and in consequence a prospect of a great decline in the price of breadstuffs.

Elder A. J. Porter, who has just traveled through the States of Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin, says there is far less excitement about Kansas affairs in the slave States than the free.

Seine fishing commenced yesterday evening in this Harbour.

The Isle la Gaieté Light was lit up Tuesday, the 29th inst.

LAUGHTER.—Professor Fogel devotes two hundred and seventy pages to profoundly philosophical investigation of the origin, use and benefit of laughter generally, and treats of its different causes and aspects under thirty-seven distinct heads. He is able to inform us how to judge a man's character and disposition by hearing him laugh. The melancholy man's laugh is a poor hi! hi! hi!—the choleric temperament shows itself in a he! he! he!—the phlegmatic in a cheerful ha! ha! ha!—and a sanguine habit is betrayed by its own characteristic ho! ho! ho!—Westminster Review.

MAY DAY.

The first day of May is a Pagan holiday, the origin of which is lost in the lapse of ages. The principal ceremony of the day is choosing the most beautiful virgin in the city or village and crowning her with a diadem of spring flowers, "Queen of Beauty."

As the seasons of the two hemispheres are opposite, this custom, if transported to the southern hemisphere, would realize a November day for the triumph of the Queen of beauty, on the coming of spring flowers, and singing birds.

May Day was celebrated only in the northern provinces of the Roman Empire. In the southern flowers prevail all the year. Their coming could not be celebrated as an epoch in virgin life. No trace of it is found in Jewish or Apostolic Christian history. But in its natural home the custom has survived by a thousand years the religion which introduced it.

May flowers appear here in abundance, having first peeped out the 5th April. But thirty hours steady east wind has brought a cold rain, and the little ones are not out gathering flowers to crown the elected beauty.

COURTS.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN? Is it the deliberate determination of the Judiciary that the State of Michigan has no rightful jurisdiction over the two counties inhabited by Mormons? Or why is it that no Courts are appointed to be held in either county?

When Emmet county was erected, it was attached to the third District and Judge Douglass appointed Courts, and held one.

Afterwards Manitowish county was erected out of Emmet and Leelanau, and the question being mooted whether this portion of the State did not by the Constitution belong to the Upper Peninsula, Manitowish county was re-attached. Yet Judge Goodwin, of that District, ignores the act, and appoints no Courts for the county.

And Judge Douglass, on appointing anew the Courts for his District, leaves out Emmet. This cannot be because it was improperly attached to his District, for Cheboygan is liable to the same objection. Yet he appointed Courts for that county.

The only reason which can be given, is a determination to treat Mormonism as an independent Kingdom. You need be in no hurry, till you are asked, gentlemen. In the mean time the people will be able to provide for the public peace without your help.

The renowned Dr. Kane, on his late Arctic expedition, took out a Daguerrean apparatus, but failed in operating in that high latitude, from some unexplained cause. During the extreme cold of the past winter our neighbour has sometimes failed of a satisfactory picture, but the warm weather has returned, and he can show some as perfect pictures as you will see at any city in the State of Michigan. Is it the cold, or the lack of light with the suns oblique rays in high latitude, which makes the difficulty in operating? We cannot tell, but we can tell a good picture.

Last fall some scamp, bent on mischief, reported at the Indian village of Arbour Croche that Strang was coming over there to collect taxes of the Indians.

A short time after, as some of them were in Mackinac, they were inquiring about Strang's authority to tax them. J. A. T. Wendell, thinking that a suitable occasion to hatch mischief, instead of telling the Indians that the story was a humbug, and that they should go home content, deliberately advised them to murder Strang.

As this is a very grave charge, and one which ought not to be entertained, except on satisfactory evidence, we take this occasion to say that we have it on the authority of one of the most-wealthy and respectable gentlemen in the State of Wisconsin, and himself long a resident at Mackinac, who was present at the interview between Wendell and the Indians, and authorizes us to make the publication, and refer any gentleman to him.

MORMON DRESS.

The Mormon ladies have their own style of dress, convenient and very beautiful. We should call it an improvement of the Bloomer, but that it preceded that; but there is now and then a lady who deems it beneath her dignity to wear a Mormon dress.

Who are these dignified ladies? What has been their past life, that they will not demean themselves by stooping to Mormon styles?

Here passes one, who, three years ago, stole a dress pattern from Elder Bacon, which, on search, was found in her possession, and she confessed the theft, and promised restitution, but has never made it. About six months earlier she was caught in the act of adultery, and her paramour was publicly flogged by the injured husband, who put her away, and she was cast out of society. It is right that such a one should not wear a Mormon dress. They don't belong to that set. But is it not a little curious to see them put on airs about it? Who keeps such company? Look and see, and judge them by the company they keep.

TALE-BEARERS—TALE-HEARERS.

Nine in ten of all the complaints about tale-bearers are ill-founded. Tale-bearing, like all other kinds of labour, is done for a market. Tale-bearers are the chief of these sinners. Any man who will surround himself with a lot of low, vicious, lying fellows, and inquire after, listen to, and believe what they say, will soon have cause enough to complain of all his neighbours.

The dog that brings a bone, will carry one. And any man who keeps the society of such, gives a kind of credit to their reports of his own conversation, by which they are able to involve him in continual offence with all his neighbours.

A tale-bearer moves mischief of himself, only where he is little known; but a tale-hearer carries mischief with him wherever he moves. He dwells in it as in a flame, and receives and communicates injury as if walking in cotton and pitch on fire.

But the tale-bearer ever toils for a market. He creates such tales as the hearers will listen to. He simply supplies the demand. When the market gluts, the supply falls off till a new demand arises. Every man gets to hear such tales as his ears itch for. Give these tale-bearers a little respite. They are the poor panders for other men's sins. Pour out your indignation upon the tale-hearer.

On the late trip down of the propeller Wisconsin she stopped at Northport, in Grand Traverse Bay. While there, it became known that Elder Isaac Pierce was on board, and a few persons, headed by Deacon Dame, determined to mob him. Capt. Hickey, of the Wisconsin, expresses the opinion that could they have got him ashore, they would have killed him.

In order to get him into their hands, Deacon Dame proposed to take process against him for debt, and arrest him, notwithstanding arrests for debt are long since abolished. But the Capt. told the Deacon he would not allow so great an outrage, under pretence of law, on his boat.

An immense crowd, including Rev. Peter Daugherty, and Mrs. Dixon, with the tail of the mob made up of the dregs of the border, came aboard to hold a Lynch Law Court over him; but the Elder stood upon his defence so resolutely, they were obliged to hear him; and, in the end, between dread of his resolute bearing, and a conviction of the justice of his cause, a majority fell off, many remarking that they knew nothing against the Mormons, and did not believe they were any worse than any body else. The half dozen vile dogs who led on, when no longer backed by the crowd, did not feel competent to attack one Mormon, and slunk away.

REFLECTIONS.—If such an outrage had been committed at Beaver Island, upon a man from Grand Traverse, the press, from Maine to California, would raise a simultaneous howl.

If it was possible to make the Mormons as revengeful and destructive as their enemies accuse them, such outrages would soon do it.

No man in Grand Traverse would be benefited by the destruction of the Mormon settlements. We have many interests in common, and in regard to those interests and to our pride in the growth of this portion of the State, have often published favourable notices of Grand Traverse as a country for settlements. Will not the business men who have a real interest in that country, reciprocate our good feelings? They have no need to join the foolish quarrels of such men as Deacon Dame.

G. Lee Cole, of Patmos, cannot be accused of despising the Commandment, "Be ye fruitful and multiply." He is eighteen years old, and has a wife and two children, not twins. He is doing a good business in replenishing the earth, as well as multiplying the inhabitants, being a successful and substantial farmer.

HARD TO BEAT.

Mr. George Kidder, of this place, has cut, during the past winter, four hundred and forty-seven cords of steamboat wood, all hard wood but three and a half cords; seventy cords of this was culled timber; and has realized by it $51.25 per month, all in cash. If this has been beat by any one between Buffalo and Chicago, send along.

We are pleased to learn that the Propeller Iowa, Capt. Alexander, will be on the route from Buffalo to Chicago, stopping regularly at this port. Of the large passenger and freight business done here, she is likely to get her full share.

The state of society in Nebraska is most decidedly border-like. Murders are common, and very little regard is had to law or life. Shooting on disputed claims call for no interference of neighbours.

The Empress Eugenia has given an heir to the throne of France. Hoops go out of fashion.

The Hudson River is to be bridged at Albany, for Railroad purposes.

The Bridge over the Mississippi at Rock Island is completed, and in use. Elder Isaac Pierce was passenger in the first train across, on his return from Nebraska.

Elder J. M. Wait has our thanks for a list of fifteen subscribers, and Elder I. Pierce eleven.

Visible mark of corruption: To stay away from religious services, and go to the same place the same day to hear a smutty trial.

TREE SETTING.—Now is the time to plant out trees.

SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS. The subject for next Sabbath is the text:

"He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; and he that believeth not, shall be damned." (Mark xvi, 16.)

A LARGE VESSEL FOR THE ISLAND TRADE.

The following letter will surprise most of our readers. We publish it as evidence of what perseverance and fixed determination can do. Bro. Shaw has a mania for a vessel, and by singularly persistent efforts has raised one. We hear it spoken of as a fortunate purchase.

The trade will well justify the undertaking. As he proposes to run between the Islands and Chicago, this will not relieve, but increase the necessity of two or three small sail to gather in fish, &c.

Success to Bro. Shaw. We commend him for his enterprise.

Chicago, Ill., April 9, '56.

BRO. STRANG.—I am getting ready to come down soon. I shall get a few recruits to come with me—three or four families. I told you last fall that I was going to buy a vessel to put into our trade. I have bought one that will carry over one hundred cords of wood.

I should like to have some one at the Island take hold with me. We can make business for her there now. Wood, posts, timber, pine or hemlock, will pay good freight to this place. I have a disposition to do all I can for our cause, and if fortune should favour me at this time I shall work for the upbuilding of the Kingdom.

I would like to have your good wishes, and all of my friends, in the effort that I am trying to make. I wish to act, in concert with my friends. By perseverance I shall prevail.

With due respect,

SAMUEL SHAW.

A MODERN CHRISTIAN.

A modern Christian is a religious heterodox. He professes to be a follower of Christ, but disbelieves the doctrine he taught. He receives the Bible as his text book, but rejects the principles it inculcates. He grinds the face of the poor, robs the fatherless and the widow, and him who hath no protector; then, as a price of his indulgence, he gives a portion of his ill gotten gains to popular institutions, and is lauded by his brethren for his benevolence. He believes that the Prophets and Apostles of old were very righteous men, but considers that their conduct would be intolerable in this enlightened age. He believes that Christ and his Apostles organized the true church, but practically he rejects the organization they made. In fact, he is the last one that a reasonable being would think of calling a Christian. W.

Report of the Returned Elders.

A. J. Porter, High Priest, has returned from the mission to the Indian country, beyond Arkansas. The mission succeeded in turning over most of the Brighamites and scattered Mormons, who have gone into the Indian country. One family only will come up, as they did not advise gathering from there. The Cherokee Nation prohibited the Brighamites from preaching in their country. Our mission was kindly received, and preached at the Capitol, and many of the principal settlements. A good feeling prevails with the Indians, and many of them have some faith.

L. D. Tubbs, of the Twelve, and L. Kidder, Priest, had their mission to Ohio, and spent the winter in Athens and Meigs counties. At Syracuse they found a company of Mormons from England and Wales, who had not learned the true way, but were led away after Brigham Young. Most of these gladly embraced the truth, and the first fruits came in with brothers Tubbs and Kidder. More are expected in the summer. Woolsey, the Brighamite Elder left in charge of them, would not openly defend his faith, but avoided discussion.

These converts are industrious, intelligent and moral. We regard their access as the beginning of an excellent work.

Isaac Pierce, of the Twelve, has returned from his mission to Iowa and Nebraska. The region about Council Bluffs is an old mission ground, but the prospect is of a larger gathering from there than any former year. Elder Pendleton is on his way home. Bro. Thompson comes with a small company, but many more are expected as soon as the spring emigration to that country enables them to sell claims.

Bro. Pierce made great efforts to draw the Brighamite Elders into discussion, but in vain. With any body else they were ready, but not with us.

WOOD TRADE AT BEAVER ISLAND.

Beaver Island is about 35,000 acres in extent. Of this 15,000 acres is likely to be cleared during the next ten years, and after reserving such timber as is wanted for building, fencing, and other local improvements, will yield fifty cords of steamboat wood to the acre, equal to 750,000 or 75,000 per year. It is not probable that there will be a market for more than one-fourth this amount. The rest is likely to be logged and burned, to get it off the land. After that period 10,000 acres of timber are sufficient to supply the wants of the inhabitants of the Island, though it should then bear a all I can fortune time I lding of our good ends, in rying to concert persever

IAW.
IAN.
a relief fesses to but dis-taught, his text inciples the face therless m who as a e gives a gains and is for his es that of old n, but conduct his enes that organpracti-ization is the being Chris-
W.

returned ed, be-ed in ites and into the ill, coming from hibited in their received, many of many of

L. Kid-nio, and s coun-pany of had ad away gladly ts came ore are he Brigwoud ded distelligent as the returned aska—an old is of a formi-y home, mpany,

as the enables raw the but in ready,

ER
5,000
5,000
d dol af-is is and will boat 0,000 not e a urth kely get peare s of
and, r a dense population, and the annual product of 10,000 acres of forest may be sold without impairing the supply.

A forest will renew itself in twenty years. This would admit of cutting 500 acres a year, equal to a supply of 25,000 cords annually.

If this timber was not diverted to any other purpose, it would be a long time before the demand for steamboat wood exceeded the supply at this Island. But after 15,000 acres of the best land is cleared, most of the timber on the remaining 20,000 is equally adapted to fencing and building purposes, as to fuel, and the extensive improvement of the prairies in Illinois is rapidly creating a demand for it.

The great number of railroads concentrating at Chicago require an immense supply of fuel. Possibly they may succeed in bringing coal into extensive use for that purpose. But if they do not, they can get their wood from here as cheap as from any place whatever; and may take off a large surplus of timber, which would otherwise be logged and burned. For many years any demand of that kind will be without effect on the supply for steamboats.

For many years no other place can successfully compete with this in the business. There is no other point near here, on the steamboat line, furnishing an abundant stock of standing timber, near an accessible harbour, with a back country to support the men and teams employed in getting the wood.

PLANT TREES

Trees are Nature's gift to the country, but their growth is not inhibited in dust and turmoil of town. They are gentle and beautiful reminders of the innocent pleasure of country life—hints of the purity of younger days when the anxious denizens of the great and wicked city were lads and lasses, and disported with the glee of childhood beneath the spreading branches that overhung the old homestead, that shaded the quiet nook, that tossed and waved on the hillside, throwing changing and fantastic shadows on the turf beneath. If for nothing else—for your children's sake, plant trees. Do not bring them up without a knowledge of what it is to love Nature in one of her most beautiful manifestations. Let not their young affections be crisped up by the bare brick walls of shadeless streets, along which the sun at noon days pours down his hottest beams. Plant trees, and let the wee things assist you while you do it. Let toddling Jimmy help you while you prepare the bed in which it is to be placed; let Charley bring the water with which you moisten the roots and mulch them in the quickening earth; let Ann or Jennie hold upright its slender trunk while you shovel in the soil. Plant one for each. Let this be Charley's, that Ann's, this in the corner is Nellie's, and that at the end of the walk shall be Jim's. Think you they will not love them? Think you, when you are dead and gone they will not make pilgrimages to the spot where you stood; that they will not repeat what you said; that they will not struggle to repress the rising tear that the old place calls up? Oh, you of little faith!

Plant trees for yourself. The walls inside your rooms are hung with landscapes, in which trees are the principal feature. You insist that your friends admire them, and you declare that you love and appreciate them yourself. You point to the delicacy of tint here, the reflected sun light there and the sombre shadows beneath. But, though in a gilt frame, and a room where gaudy painters and vulgar upholsters have done their worst, they are all mean and tawdry compared with the living trees that the Great Master has caused to grow. That daub cost you a handsome sum; but you cannot or do not spare the trifle which, expended as we would wish, would give you a pleasure that the painting never can confer.

Plant trees for your neighbours. We fear that you are doing nothing to insure your remembrance in the busy world that you cannot be a part of forever. You have been lucky in trade; have amassed money in corn; have become half-millionaire in real estate. Trees outlast fortunes. Storms toss their branches and sway their trunks, but the gentle breeze kisses their foliage to-morrow, and they give no sign of the trial they have passed. Not so your riches.

You have done little in the way of making the world more beautiful or happy. It is not too late to begin now. Begin with the cheapest method: plant trees that will live when you have given up riches and gone where they are of no use; but where a cultivated sense of the good and beautiful count more than all the gold of Ophir.

Plant trees, if you will speculate, for their money worth.—Hide the decaying front of that tenement occupied by your poorer neighbour. Hide it with a coronal of living green, that will more than compensate for the want of paint or the lack of skill in the wooden architect who designed it. Trees are money in every city; and more than anywhere else, where Nature in her gifts of the beautiful has been so niggard. Relieve the flatness of surface, and destroy the unbroken continuity of view, by trees. If the lot is wet and of little value, there is the more necessity for the beauty that trees will give. If it is high and dry, trees will grow the better thereon. Put money in thy purse—and plant trees.—Chicago Tribune.

FLOUR COMING DOWN.

The flour quotations in the New York market are alarming speculators of all grades and kinds. They concede that the culminating point has been reached, and that, with the prospect of an ordinary crop in Europe, prices must recede. How far the recession will extend, is now the question.

The country demands a return to a normal condition of things. Since the first influx of California gold into the channels of trade, the tendency has been upward, until in the last year, under the urgent demands of the Eastern war, famine prices have ruled. But the end has come; and with the prices of grain, go the prices of beef, pork, and all edible things. Men who consume can breathe again, and hope hereafter for plenty of cheap bread. Peace is declared, the war demand is satisfied, the country is full of wheat and corn, and the market is dull. Labour not of the agricultural sort is coming uppermost, and the farmers who have held the whip hand of all the world besides will look in vain for the immediate return of the good times from which they have reaped so large an advantage.—Chicago Tribune.

DAILY NORTHERN ISLANDER.

A note from King Strang, enclosing the Circular of the Proprietors, informs us that, on the opening of navigation, the Northern Islander will be published Daily.

Whatever may be said of their cause or creed, or otherwise, the Mormons evince "uncommon" enterprise and determination, and no portion of them more of both than King Strang and his followers of Beaver Island.—Detroit Tribune.

Oh! the Skirts! the Skirts!

Oh, Venus de Medicis! how can we embrace them at all? Positively there is no getting around them in one effort. Skirts have swollen to that extent of fashion that no door is wide enough for them to pass through, without considerable squeezing. Real belles of the fashion now seem like moving bells, literally, so that mullets and men have to stir well in the streets, else they will run against ropes, hoops, bag matting, crinoline, and the deuce knows what, which completely takes up the sidewalk and inhabits the dress. Then for the girl, by Jove, she seems no where.

The other day we happened to see two of these dumpy kind of moving shells of fashion going along the street a la pointe style, hand close and skirts out. At forty paces distant they seem like miniature pyramids of silk; at twenty paces we smelt cologne water and other essences; at ten paces a little lump like a bonnet was discernible at the top of the skirt pyramid; at three paces we discovered four ringlets of slim appearance, resembling cat-tails dipped in molasses—two eyes of weak and absurd expression, like boiled onions—lips like unto thin sandwiches with a bit of discoloured meat sticking out, thin and dry, and cheeks rouged "mienfañ." [Chinese colored:] positively this was all that could create in us the impression or imagination that the above things dry goods, etc., formed a woman.—Petersburgh Express.

MARINE.

ARRIVALS.

April 27, Steamer Superior, Capt. Jones, from Chicago. Passenger, A. J. Porter, from Tallequah, Indian Territory mission. Took wood of J. M. Wait.

" " Prop. Louisville, Capt. Caldwell, from Chicago. Passengers, D. L. Tubbs, lady and children, L. Kidder, Mr. Thomas, lady and child, David George, from the Ohio mission. [E. Jones missed at a change of cars in Indiana, baggage arrived.] and J. M. Wait, from Canada and Michigan mission. Took wood at the Old Point.

" " Prop. Wisconsin, Capt. Hickey, from Chicago. Passenger, L. Pierce, from the Nebraska mission. Took wood from M. M. Aldrich.

DEPARTURES.

April 28, Steamer Superior, Capt. Jones, for ports on Lake Superior.

" " Prop. Wisconsin, Capt. Hickey, for Ogdensburg.

" " Prop. Louisville, Capt. Caldwell, for Ogdensburg. Passengers, Miller and Newcomb.

PASSED UP.

April 30, before sunrise, a large sail, not recognized. The White Cloud cleared from Detroit for Chicago April 21st, with 200 m. lumber. It is supposed that this is the Cloud, ahead of everything else through the Straits. A few hours later several sail appeared under the east shore, bound up, with strong east wind.

REPORTED.

April 17, Prop. Lady of the Lake, Capt. Rosman, made Paros Isle, when, after five or six days delay with ice and adverse winds, succeeded in taking off the crew and cargo of the Crescent, wrecked last fall. Passenger, for this place, Mortimer Aldrich. Just arrived, in a small boat.

COMMERCIAL.

REVIEW OF THE MARKET.

May 1st.

FLOUR.—Flour was sold from the Louisville at $8.50, and retails at $9. It will be likely to go much lower, though the fall will not be sudden.

WHEAT.—There is a considerable supply of both winter and spring wheat, most of it second rate and inferior, but some of it of an excellent quality. The best spring wheat is in good demand for seed, at $1.25. Small quantities of winter, spring and mixed are reserved for shipment.

BARLEY.—This grain is in request for seed, at $1.25 per bushel, and scarcely to be had at that.

RYE.—No rye is to be had.

CORN.—There is a good supply of corn for use, but scarcely any for sale. It rates at 75 cts. to $1.00.

OATS.—Oats are worth 50 cts. per bushel. Oats in the bundle are worth 4 to 5 cts.

BUCKWHEAT.—This grain is rather plenty, but finds a ready sale at 75 cts.

BEANS.—Good beans are rather scarce, at $2.00 to $2.50, and in request.

POTATOES.—Potatoes sell yet at 50 cts., but with a tendency upward. There are considerable quantities for export, and the price in other markets will determine the price here.

PORK.—Pork sells at $18 per bbl, and 11 cts. per pound.

BUTTER.—Nominally butter is worth 25 cts., but there is little for sale at any price, and some who are making small quantities for sale, choose to part with it at a less price.

LARD.—Lard is nominal at 14 cts., and little on the market.

EGGS.—Fresh eggs are abundant at 19 cts., with a downward tendency.

WOOD.—Steamboat wood, near the wharves, sells at $1.75 to $2.00, and the quantity is larger than any past season, and of excellent quality. It is understood that the trade will open at $2.25 to the boats. We have made considerable efforts to ascertain the quantity got out on all the Islands, but without any satisfactory result. It is reported that there is an increased supply on both the Manitue Islands. At Beaver there is a material increase, and so far as we have been able to make personal observations, an improvement in the quality. Five wharves will be in the wood trade at Beaver, and we presume two at North Manitue, and one at South.

FISH.—The quantity of fish wintered here by the traders for the spring market is not as large as usual, and they have purchased very few during the winter. The quantity in the hands of the fishermen is, on the contrary, unprecedentedly large. Spring fishing commenced 29th April.

SHINGLES.—The supply on hand is very small, and the demand for home consumption large. Nominally good shingles are worth $2.50 per m., but they cannot be had to supply the home trade at that price.

STAVES.—There is not a stock of staves for one tenth the summer wants. Within six weeks after fishing commences barrels will be made of what is now growing timber, and they are likely to be difficult to obtain at that. Many have depended on a supply from Lake Mormon, but are all destined to disappointment. There is not a stave there for sale, and but an indifferent supply for the three shops at that place. Timber suitable for staves is very scarce there.

HOOPS.—Hoops are very scarce. If the shops were all in operation there would hardly be a supply for a week, and very few are coming forward.

COOPERAGE.—The cooper shops have been generally closed through the winter, and there is little cooperage on hand, and a great deficit in workmen and stocks. If the seine fishing should open well, a few days would realize a scarcity. Half barrels will be in demand much faster than they can be made here. They now sell at 60 cts., but are likely to go up to 63 very early in the season. The deficit will be supplied from Green Bay and Saint Clair.

SAWED LUMBER.—The supply of boards, plank and scantling is next to none. The buildings already projected, will require importation. At the steam mill a very little has been made, but spring does not find 10 m. for sale. The mill on Big River is saving a little every day, but all is ordered much faster than it can be cut. There is a prospect of low water all the spring, and very little sawing.

HORSES.—Team horses are in request, at $125, to $150, a head. Mules at $100 to $125.

CATTLE.—Working oxen rate at $100, to $150 a pair, and are in demand. Cows $38 to $45, and not likely to fall.

WANT OF LABOURERS.—Labour is in greater demand than we have ever seen it. Wages have continually advanced, but with the advance comes no relief. It is next to impossible to hire men at any price. Possibly a half dozen persons may be seen lounging around, complaining of want of employ. At the same time a score of employers are offering unusually high wages for any number of labourers, and unable to get them. The work is not severe. Workmen are so much in demand that they generally have very much their own way.

Fishermen, of good habits, will be able to engage at $25 per month, for the season, and raw hands $16 to $20, and found. Wood choppers, by the cord, will clear still higher wages. Prices range from 75 cents to $1.13 per cord. Farmers find the difficulty of hiring so great that they will generally let their land on shares. Industrious men, who understand making staves, shingles and hoops, can probably realize $1.50 per day, while present rates continue.

RETAIL PRICE CURRENT.

Labour, common per day,	$1 00 @ $1 25
Mechanicks,	1 50 @ 2 00
Cutting wood per cord,	75 @ 1 00
Hauling "	75 @ 1 13
Teaming per day,	2 50 @ 3 00
Fish barrels,	60
" halves,	60
Four wages,	28 @ 29
Staves, per m.,	6 50
Hoops per m.,	6 00 @ 7 00
" from below,	4 50 @ 5 00
Gilling twine,	87 @ 1 00
Seaming twine,	40 @ 44
Cordean, manilla,	25 @ 25
" cotton,	25 @ 31
Pitch per lb.,	07 @ 10
Oakum "	12 @ 14
Cut nails,	07 @ 08
Wrought,	13
Iron,	07 @ 09
Steel, best,	25
Shingles per m.,	2 50
Boards, hemlock,	14 00
" pine,	14 00 28 00
Calico,	08 @ 14
Alpaca,	37 @ 63
Delain,	18 @ 25
Gingham,	12 @ 25
Kentucky jeans,	25 @ 50
Cassimere,	63 @ 1 00
Fine blanket cloth,	2 50 @ 4 00
Muslin,	08 @ 12 1/2
Demins,	10 @ 12 1/2
Drilling,	12 1/2 @ 14
Fish, white, per lb.,	04
" fresh,	03
" fresh,	03
Potatoes, per bush,	50
Pork, per lb.,	11
Beef,	09 @ 10
Meal, per hundred,	2 75
Tea, per lb.,	50 @ 1 00
Coffee,	13 @ 18
Allspice,	12 1/2 @ 13 1/2
Pepper,	12 1/2 @ 18
Starch,	15 @ 16
Tobacco,	31 @ 44
Molasses, per gal.,	75 @ 1 00
Sugar, muscovado, per lb.,	10
Maple, buying,	07 @ 10
" selling,	08 @ 12 1/2
Flour, per lb.,	05
" per bbl.,	9 00
Rice, per lb.,	09 @ 10
Ginger,	16
White fish, per bbl, buying,	7 00
Trout,	6 50
Lard, per lb.,	14 @ 19
Butter,	25
Eggs, per doz.,	19

CHEAPER THAN THE CHEAPEST.

J. M. Wait has returned from his mission, and will be found at his old stand, ready to serve his customers, as usual.

By the first steamers from below he will be in receipt of an extensive assortment of spring and summer goods, in his usual variety.

He will have the largest and best assortment of ready made clothing ever offered in the fishing regions.

MORE GOODS EXPECTED.

In consequence of the great increase of his business, he has sent an associate to New York to select a still larger assortment of goods, which will be received here as soon as they can come through the Erie Canal.

Cash paid for fish and furs.

Saint James, May 1st, 1856. 716.

M. M. Aldrich is in trade at his old stand, ready to serve his customers, on his usual accommodating terms.

A splendid assortment of dry goods, shelf goods, &c., and a large stock of salt for fish packing, are expected on the first boats from below.

Wood and fish purchased at all times, and the highest price paid.

Troy, May 1st, 1856. 716.

THE OLD SOUTH PIER.

This splendid wooding wharf has been greatly extended during the past winter, and is stocked with the largest and best stock of steamboat wood ever offered along the Lakes, which I offer to Steamboats at the lowest price of the trade on Beaver Island.

M. M. ALDRICH.

Troy, May 1st, 1856. 716.

COOPERAGE.

O. P. Briggs carries on the coopering business at the old North-West Establishment, where he is always prepared to serve his customers on the most liberal terms.

He has a large stock of half barrels for fish-packing on hand, and will continue the manufacture with dispatch.

Special orders filled promptly.

Saint James, May 4th, 1856. 716.

CORRECT AND LIFE-LIKE DAGUERREOTYPES.

J. ATKYN.

DAGUERREAN ARTIST.

St. James Hall, Beaver Island, Mich.

Having fitted and furnished his Daguerrean Room in a style for comfort and convenience, not surpassed by any in Manitue and adjacent counties, will be happy to receive visitors. His mode of taking pictures completely obviates the necessity of sitting from one to three minutes. It can be done as well in from ten to thirty seconds, and in all cases less than one minute.

N. B. Instructions in the art, with all the late improvements, given. Ladies and gentlemen would do well to give him a call. His pictures are taken on silver plate, over which is a coating of gold. They will not corrode at sea, or change in any climate; are beautiful in tenor, bold and clear in effect. Call and examine specimens, at St. James Hall.

Gallery open from 9 A. M., to 4 P. M. Likenesses taken in clear or cloudy weather. Beaver Island, April 28th, '56. 342.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

The following publications are constantly for sale at this office, and will be sent by mail, free of postage, on receipt of the prices herein named:

The "Prophetick Discussion," being a full examination of the evidences of the Prophetick callings of Brigham Young and James J. Strang. 44 pages. Quarto. Price, 20 cents.

The "New Dispensation," eight letters, by Oliver Cowdery. Quarto. Price, 20 cents.

The "Diamond, or Law of Prophetick Succession." 20 pages. 8 vo. Price 5 cents.

We shall issue in May next "Sacred Hymns," a small volume, selected for the use of the Latter Day Saints. 172 pages. Price, in fine morocco binding, 50 cents.

This is printed, folded and ready for the binder.

Also, the "Law of the Lord," being a translation from the Egyptian of the Law given to Moses in Sinai, with numerous and valuable notes. 320 to 350 pages. 8 vo. Price, in calf, $2.00.

C. E. & L. BRESLER,

DEALERS AND SHIPPERS IN

FURS, WOOL AND SHEEPSKINS,

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

Cash advances made on consignment.

J. M. Wait, Saint James, purchases for this house, and pays cash at all times.

Saint James, Mich., April 28, '56. 342.

OLD POINT WHARF.

The proprietors will be prepared to do a small business in the best quality of steamboat wood, at this popular landing place, during the coming season of navigation. We have forty feet water at the front of this wharf, and therefore are free from the annoyance of getting aground.

Saint James, March 10, '56. 112.

TO WOODMEN.

Any quantity of wood, which can possibly be brought forward, can be put on the Old Point wharf, at 12 1/2 cts. per cord wharfage and commission at all times. The cash will be paid over the moment the wood is sold. Emigrants landing at the Point will pass with their effects free of charge.

Saint James, March 10, '56. 112.

STEAMBOAT WOOD.

B. G. Wright, at Galilee, will be prepared to open trade in the spring with 3,000 cords best body wood, beech and maple, on wharf and beach, and facilities of bringing forward at the rate of 30 cords per day during the season.

This wharf is greatly extended, and is the best possible condition for the accommodation of boats.

Galilee, March 8, '56. 112.

A small quantity of brooms, also a variety of leather, for sale at this office.

1. Polygamy has existed from the earliest ages. (Gen. iv, 19.) It is often mentioned in the sacred oracles, and never spoken against. The absence of prohibition will not, as a general rule, amount to a justification. But as this institution began in the life time of Adam, and with a single exception, has continued with most nations through all time, until this present; as it was practiced by a large number of the Patriarchs and Prophets, and favoured servants of God; the fact that it is not spoken against, raises a very strong presumption that God looks upon it with favour.

2. It is not however left to rest on presumption, or any doubtful construction. Its sanctity is a matter of distinct divine testimony. Nor is it true, as many have said, that Polygamy is permitted in the Old Testament, but prohibited in the New. It is required by the Old, and not forbidden by the New Testament; and though the Book of Mormon interdicts it in the case of the Nephites, (Jacob 1, 4, ii, 6,) the interdict is expressly stated to be in consequence of general corruptions which prevented the well working of the institution, and not that it was itself noxious; and makes the express reservation that in a future day God will institute Polygamy anew, as the means of raising up a holy seed.

3. In the Commandments which God gave to Moses, concerning the conquest of Midian, they were required to exterminate all the males, but to preserve the women children alive. (Num. xxxi, 15-18, 40, 46, 47.) Now the Commandment requires all men and women, to be fruitful and multiply. (Gen. i, 28, ix, 1, 7, Lev. xvi, 9.) By means of war many men in Israel perished, leaving an excess of women. Here was an addition of sixteen thousand women, whom the men of Israel had to take for wives, beyond the excess of women in Israel. Without Polygamy, it was impossible to find husbands for so many.

4. The whole course of the Law given by Moses, assumes the existence of Polygamy as a legal institution, and provides for the relative rights of the wives and their children, forbidding diminishing the substance of one wife, when he takes another, (Ex. xxi, 10,) or preferring the son of a favourite wife by giving him the double portion that pertains to the firstborn, when he is not firstborn. (Deut. xxi, 15.)

5. In practice God has in many ways sanctioned Polygamy by bestowing great blessings on the parties to such marriages, and upon their posterity. Abraham had two wives: Sarah and Hagar. Though Hagar was only a servant, and never being exalted to the dignity of her husband, is called a concubine; that is, a servant wife; her son Ishmael was highly blessed, and received great and glorious promises as an heir to Abraham. (Gen. xvi, 12, xvii, 20, xxi, 13, 18.)

6. Jacob had four wives; two taking rank with him, and two servant women, who are therefore called concubines. By the Law of Monogamy, which prevails in most Christian countries, Leah alone was his lawful wife. Yet God regarded the sons of Rachel, Zilpha and Bilhah as legitimate sons, and made them all Patriarchs, and heirs to Jacob's authority and his favour with God. Joseph, Rachel's son, who, according to the Christian of modern days, was a bastard, God established as the firstborn, and chief of the Patriarchs.

7. In these cases Polygamy has every mark of God's approbation, both by its being pursued uncondemned by men whose daily walk was guided by the word of God, and by their receiving peculiar and especial blessings which they could not otherwise have attained to.

8. But there was a Law in the days of the Patriarchs, reiterated by Moses and enforced in Israel in later ages, which required that when a man died, leaving a wife and no sons, his next brother should take the wife and raise up seed to his deceased brother. This requisition was upon him equally, whether married or not. But if unmarried, it became necessary that he should marry a wife to raise up seed to himself, lest in preserving his brother's name he should blot out his own. (Gen. xxxviii, 7-10, Deut. xxv, 5, 6, Ruth iv, 5-10.)

9. In these cases Polygamy became a positive duty, enforced by direct Commandment, as well as by the great principles of the Law of God. As often as a man obtained an inheritance, and died without posterity, it became a duty that one of his kindred have two wives; one to perpetuate his own name, and the other to perpetuate that of his kinsman.

10. If it is objected that this Law grew out of the Law of Inheritance, the rule will not be changed thereby; for it did not begin with the peculiar policy of Israel as a nation; and the Law of Inheritance, with which it is connected, is perpetual.

11. Nor will it avail to say that in these cases he is not the real husband of the wife of his deceased brother, but only a proxy for the deceased; for it is equally Polygamy during life. But if it be yielded that marriage concerns the everlasting life, quite as much as this mortal, then it follows that every one who is truly married to several successive wives, will, in the immortal life, be a Polygamist.

12. As the reason of the Law in these cases was the necessity of heirs to possess the inheritance, and to keep up the name of him who first received it; there are equal reasons in favour of Polygamy in every case when he who has an inheritance is childless, and his wife barren. And if there is a well grounded fear that the posterity may not survive to future generations, the same reasons have more or less force.

13. Gideon, who seems to have had the favour of God before all the Judges from Joshua to Samuel, had seventy sons, the children of many wives. (Jud. viii, 30.) In the fragments which have survived to us of the history of those times, it is impossible to know to what extent Polygamy prevailed. Of most men named, we do not know whether they had any wife. But it is remarkable that of all the great and good men of whose families we know anything, a very large majority had more than one wife.

14. In the case of David, God approbates Polygamy on a large scale, in the most distinct and emphatic manner. David, before he came to the Kingdom, had married Michal, the daughter of Saul, (1st Sam. xviii, 27, 2d Sam. iii, 13,) Abigail, the widow of Nabal, (1st Sam. xxv, 42,) and Ahinoam, of Jezreel. (1d xxx, 5, 2d Sam. ii, 2.)

15. Yet with these three wives, on the death of Saul, God gave his wives to David, to take them to his bosom. (2d Sam. xii, 8.) How many wives Saul had, does not clearly appear; but whatever the number was, God gave them to a man who had three already, and declared his willingness to give him more. And David, fully assured of God's approbation, when he came from Hebron to Jerusalem, took more wives and concubines. (1d v, 13.) In all this, David is nowhere condemned; but in the matter of Uriah's wife, he is punished with great severity. (1d xi, 3, 4, xii, 11,) because in the mind of God, taking another man's wife was adultery and robbery, but Polygamy was lawful. God commanded Moses to marry two wives. (Hosea i, 2, iii.)

16. In the face of such facts, it is doing violence to the word of God, to say that Polygamy was only suffered. It is hardly possible that God should give any further evidence of his approval of it. And there is nothing in all the scriptures to make a different rule, or to alter the force of the argument in favour of this. The clear intention is to approve of it.

17. The oft repeated assertion, that Polygamy is abolished in the New Testament, has no truth in it. There is not a text found in the book which justifies the assertion. Some have said that the language, "They twain shall be one flesh," forbade the idea of more than one wife. But when it is considered that they are not one flesh in their own persons, but in the persons of their children, who are flesh of the flesh of both father and mother, it will appear that those words are just as applicable to Polygamists as Monogamists; families; the true sense of the words being that a man beget children on his wife, and no other woman. In fact, his child, begotten on any other woman, is the flesh of his twain; but God has not joined them, and they sin in joining.

18. The injunction that a Bishop shall be the husband of one wife, (1st Tim. iii, 2,) has been frequently offered as evidence that God disapproved of Polygamy. This is absurd. The rule is not that he shall be the husband of but one, but that he shall be the husband of one.

19. But if we were to so construe the language as to forbid a Bishop having more than one wife, the limitation of the interdict to Bishops would clearly imply that other men might lawfully have more than one wife. Unless the general rule was, that men might have more than one wife, there could be no occasion to say Bishops should not.

20. Indeed, such seems to be the understanding of this text by the most enlightened of those Christians who understand that it limits a Bishop to one wife. For the Christian Missionaries who have instituted Christianity among the Pagan nations of India, receive members into their Churches who have more than one living wife, and allow them to continue to cohabit with them; such members being admitted to all the privileges of the Church, but not allowed to hold any office.*

21. It is also an unquestioned fact in history that Polygamy existed in the Apostolic Church.† The celibacy of the Clergy and the Monogamy of the laity exist on the same foundation; the authority of the Roman Catholic Church.

22. And it is worthy of observation that Polygamy was nowhere abolished upon the authority of the divine Law, but either by Canon or by Statute. Indeed, it was not really abolished at all. Legitimate marriages of the Clergy were abolished, but they were allowed to keep unmarried female companions, and in many countries, those who had them, had an extra allowance from the Church for their support.

23. And, notwithstanding the general prohibition of Polygamy, it exists in fact, though not in Law, in all Christian countries. Kings, whose marriages are governed by State reasons, generally use the privilege of taking one or more wives, to whom they are not married strictly according to Law, who are nevertheless, in no sense under the imputation of unchastity, and numerous citizens followed their example.

24. Not only have Christian writers of the highest rank justified these departures from the rule of Monogamy, but many of them have defended Polygamy, as the preferable and more moral institution. Luther, Melancthon, and the chief authors of the Protestant Reformation, gave Polygamy their express sanction in favour of the Landgrave of Hesse;‡ and numerous Protestants defended it as scriptural.

25. And if Polygamy does not exist in most Protestant countries now as a legal institution, that fact is attributable to statute, and not to the discipline of the Churches. Very few if any of them have one word in their disciplines, which discountenances Polygamy in any way whatever.

26. And that their testimony is not against Polygamy as a godly institution, but only against violating the law of the State, appears in this: the New Testament allows of divorce only for adultery. (Matt. xix, 8, 9.) Yet when a Christian man has obtained a divorce for some other cause, which is no cause by the Law of God, and marries a second wife, the first being by the Law of God just as much his wife as she ever was, they receive him into their communion, just as before.

27. In peaceable times Polygamy would naturally limit itself to a very few cases, because most men desire marriage. But as in all settled communities a considerable number more of women than men desire to marry, there is always a necessity of Polygamy, that they may obtain husbands.

28. The excess of women seeking marriage, gives to men an undue advantage in obtaining companions for life. Every man who desires a wife can get one, but many women must fail. As a consequence many women are led to make very unequal matches, in despair of a better opportunity; and others, whose greatest joy it would have been to surround themselves with a numerous posterity, waste their solitary lives on pet birds and kittens, rather than bear children to corrupt and degraded sires; who, had Polygamy existed to a very limited extent, would have been the mothers of eminent sons.

29. Many of the most eminent statesmen and scholars of modern times have died childless, or left only bastard children of degraded women, and slaves; who, had Polygamy been reputable, would, like the Patriarchs, have transmitted their virtues and their greatness to a numerous posterity.

30. And as the lowest order of intellect is most prolific, unless some means is adopted of increasing the progeny of intellectual men, and securing that progeny from mothers of eminent talents, superior virtues, and healthy persons, the effort to elevate the masses will be counteracted by the vast disproportion in the posterity of elevated and degraded.

* Now what shall be done in respect to such persons (Polygamists) when they give credible evidence of personal piety, and seek admission into the Christian Church? No case of this kind occurred in my own missionary experience. But some cases have occurred in India, and this difficulty will occur in numerous instances in the progress of the gospel. The subject will also have the consideration and decision of the highest authority, ecclesiastical and judicial, in India and England. My opinion is that the general practice in missions in respect to such cases will be as follows: When any man who has more than one wife to whom he has been legally married, wishes to be admitted into the Christian Church, he will be required to make a free and full statement of his domestic relations. He will be permitted to retain his marital connection with all his wives and his potential relation to all his children, subject to the discipline of the Church for the proper government of his household. Whether he may or may not cohabit with his different wives will be left, I believe, entirely to him and to them, to act according to their views of duty. (Jama, Axioms and Monitions, Geographical, Historical, Political, Social, and Religious; with a Particular Account of the State and Prospects of Christianity. By David O. Axtell, D. D., Missionary of the American Board for twenty-five years in India, etc.; pp. 550-4.)

† The Celestian Missionary Conference, (representing Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Congregationalists,) consisting of the Missionaries of the various Societies which have Missionaries in that vicinity, after frequent consultation and much consideration on the subject of Polygamy, as it exists in India, were unanimous in the following conclusion: If a convert before becoming a Christian had married more wives than one, in accordance with the practice of the Jewish and Primitive Christian Churches, he shall be permitted to keep them all; but such a person is not eligible to any office in the Church. (Jama, Axioms and Monitions, etc.; p. 601.)

‡ His wife was ill-treated, and a drunkard, and he had his case before the Theologians of Wittemberg. By an official termination, they allowed him to take another, though he could not divorce her; but asked him to keep the second marriage secret. Two of Luther's letters, of an earlier date, allow Polygamy to be scriptural. (Michael's Life of Luther.)

31. That means is Polygamy; which will elevate the human race by making it possible for every virtuous woman, capable of bearing healthy, intelligent children, and exercising such self-control that she can spend her days in love and kindness, with others like herself, to bear children to men possessed of every moral and intellectual excellence; and leaving jealous, envious, and petulant women, who cannot endure that a sister shall be beloved by the same husband, to pair themselves off with those of like disposition, or with such as have inferior intellects, or bodies wasted upon strange women, or are infirm from hereditary corruptions.

32. Polygamy elevates man, by giving him more blessings in well doing, a higher reward for a faithful and virtuous life, a more numerous posterity to perpetuate his fame, and inherit his honours, and virtuous and intellectual society as the reward only of a well regulated life, and the devotion of superior intellect to the public service. It elevates woman, by making her man's companion, instead of a piece of furniture in the house as some, or a domestic drudge, as others are; by bringing marriage and suitable companionship in the reach of all; and making so many opportunities of a happy settlement in life, that an amiable and virtuous young woman cannot fail of finding an affectionate and worthy husband.

33. Under the Law of Monogamy, it is evident that matches are made with trifling regard to fitness. Women can have next to no choice. But men have little inducement to discriminate, and less to see to the proper ordering of their households, so as to make good wives of suitable women. If a woman, otherwise unexceptionable, is petulant and subject to violent outbursts of temper, her husband, expecting to have no other wife, may indulge her, rather than assume the unpleasant task of applying a correction. In the end his house becomes a bédlam, and his children are reared in the midst of a tempest. It is no wonder that his prayer is, that they be few; nor that many such seek quiet dalliance with unchaste women; or, with blasted hopes, waste their intellects over intoxicating potations.

34. Such a one, believing that a multitude of children were a crown of glory to an old man, and looking to the reward of a long and virtuous life, in a numerous posterity, all established in the affections of the people he served, would feel the necessity of curbing in himself, and in all his house, that illtemper which would render such a reward impossible.

35. It is common to hear Polygamy spoken against, as, at best, licensed lust. With many, indeed with all who make carnal indulgence the chief end, marriage is no less. But such are always opposed to Polygamy. If such a man seeks variety, Polygamy is too expensive. If he does not, one woman is sufficient; and will at the same time serve either as mistress of his house, or domestic drudge.

36. It is only men who seek congenial companionship in life, and children in their own images to live after them, who are willing to charge themselves with the care of several wives, and the government of great households; subjecting themselves to that rigid mental discipline which is necessary to keep proper order, and cultivate all the social virtues in such a family. The blindest can see that the carnal mind can find easier and cheaper modes of indulgence in unbridled lust.

37. The fact that houses of prostitution are unknown in countries where Polygamy prevails, while they exist everywhere in Monogamist countries, and cannot be suppressed, ought to put to shame those who object to Polygamy on the score of chastity. And, the further fact, that where Polygamy prevails, adultery is exceedingly rare, and in Monogamist countries so common as to scarcely call for a passing remark, should cause such objectors to seal their lips.

38. But however men may declaim against Polygamy in this life, all who attain to the life everlasting, will, in the presence of God, dwell with it forever. For Polygamist Abraham, and Jacob, whose seed we are by the adoption of faith, if we attain to that estate, and Gideon, David, and Solomon, will be there, and their wives, the mothers of Patriarchs, Princes and Prophets with them; who were joined to them in the mortal, and will not be sundered from them in the everlasting life.

SELECTED NOTES FROM THE BOOK OF THE LAW.

At the age of twenty years a daughter has a right to give herself in marriage, without her father's consent. He ought not to withhold to give her at an earlier age to a worthy man, whom she loves, because not the man of his choice; and at that age she ought to seek his consent, though not concluded by his refusal.

1. It is a father's duty to seek to get his sons well married, soon after they are sixteen years old. He may restrain them from improper marriages, till they are twentythree. But to refuse to allow a son to take one wife, who was not liable to any just and well founded objections, down till he was twentythree years old, would be so gross an abuse of parental authority, as to justify call for the interposition of the Judges.

2. The power of the parents over the marriages of their children, is a conservative power. They ought not to make their matches; only to aid them in proper, and restrain them of improper unions. As this power ceases early in life, and is ever subject to the supervision of the Judges, to prevent its use for malicious and selfish purposes, it cannot work any very serious grievances.

A DANGEROUS OPERATION.—It is stated that M. Stoltz, of Paris, has recently published the details of a case in which he performed the Cesarean operation twice on the same individual with success, saving both mother and infant. The case has produced a great sensation in the medical world of France. The second operation is said to be not so dangerous as the first, as adhesions are usually formed which facilitate recovery. It almost makes one shudder to think of the success of this dangerous and painful operation, for it will have the effect to stimulate surgical adventurers to experiment on the unfortunate whenever they can trump up an excuse.

They are better off for liquor at Lake Superior than for any other supply. The last vessel up, instead of taking flour took five hundred barrels of whiskey and beer. Ontonagon has a population of 1500, and contains 26 grog shops.

WANTS.

A bookbinder, who can do substantial work, in all styles, from plain to rich, will find constant employment at this place. One job of two thousand volumes, and several smaller ones, will be waiting and in a great hurry, at the opening of navigation. A gentleman of family, who would settle for a permanent business, would be preferred. Entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks, on all occasions, and unexceptionable morals, would be indispensable qualifications.

Three or four good boatbuilders, able to carry on a yard on their own account, would be pressed for more work than they could do.

Six or eight journeymen coopers would find constant employ, at good prices.

A house, boat, sign and ornamental painter is greatly needed here.

Three or four "jour" printers, of unexceptionable habits, can have constant employment here, at book and news work, the coming summer.

There is such a lack of qualified school teachers here as to make it really difficult keeping our schools in operation.

A baker and provisioner would find this place a most eligible location.

Who will come here and build a gristmill? There is only one small one here, and that is much the same as none. Numerous handmills are in requisition, for want of other facilities.

If some man would set up a cedar pail and tub factory, he could sell his productions at his door faster than he could finish them.

A wooden dish mill would give profitable employ to several hands.

Two men, good workmen at chairs, would get more orders, accompanied with the cash, than they could fill.

One bedstead maker would be equally fortunate in locating here.

A good brickmaker could find ready sales for several kilns of brick annually. Brick are now brought from Milwaukee here, and cost ten dollars per thousand. But we have as good claybanks as there are at Milwaukee, and the wood can be had for the chopping.

Three or four brick and stone masons and plasterers would find constant employment, at good prices.

A shoemaker, who can stock himself, and keep custom work for sale, would find the business excellent.

A tanner and currier, who wished to open an old fashioned country tannery, on any capital, from two hundred to five thousand dollars, would find this a very desirable location.

A tailor would find constant employment, and prompt pay. If able to keep ready made clothing he would find home sales for the work of a dozen hands.

Four or five persons qualified to peddle merchandise, can make large profits on small investments. Each would require a boat, costing from $30 to $100, and $50 to begin business on would serve, though $500 could be invested in such an enterprise. The business is remarkably adapted to invalids, who wish to recover their health.

Four or five persons who can speak Chippewa, Ottawa or Potawatomi, can learn at this office of most desirable openings.

At this time there is not a single vessel owned at this place, where the trade is sufficient to employ three or four. There are men here able and disposed to purchase or build, if they could get reliable and trustworthy sailors to take charge of them.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. VI.—NO. 5.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1856.

WHOLE NO. 88.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,
LAKE MICHIGAN, BY
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time, will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation, in winter, the ISLANDER will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

WANTS.

A bookbinder, who can do substantial work, in all styles, from picture, commonly an indifferent, authorities here. plain to rich, will find constant and frequently a very bad one. These gentlemen caused the employment at this place. One charged double prices, and other coffin to be opened, where job of two thousand volumes, and yet did a prosperous business, till in was found a fossil man in several smaller ones, will be wait by intemperance and neglect of respect as perfect as when doing and in a great hurry, at the properties of life destroyed in his stony prison some opening of navigation. A gentleman's prospects. One who drinks thousands years ago. It was a man of family, who would set intoxicating liquors, need not unpromptly determined to lose no tie for a permanent business, would undertake it. Any one who wishes time in forwarding the coffin be preferred. Entire abstinence to undertake the business, should and then contents to Toronto from intoxicating drinks, on all be here ready to work by the there to be seen and examined occasions, and unexceptionable first of July, as the influx of the by the assembled wisdom of the province, as also by Sir William morals, would be indispensable strangers at the Conferences make Logan, the celebrated Geologist now on a visit to the Canadian Capital.

Three or four good boatbuilders, able to carry on a yard on their own account, would be pressed for more work than they could do.

Six or eight journeymen coopers would find constant employment, at good prices.

A house, boat, sign and ornamental painter is greatly needed here.

Three or four "jour" printers, of unexceptionable habits, can have constant employment here, at book and news work, the coming summer.

There is such a lack of qualified school teachers here as to make it really difficult keeping our schools in operation.

A baker and provisioner would find this place a most eligible location.

Who will come here and build a gristmill? There is only one small one here, and that is much the same as none. Numerous handmills are in requisition, for want of other facilities.

If some man would set up a cedar pail and tub factory, he could sell his productions at his door faster than he could finish them.

A wooden dish mill would give profitable employment to several hands.

Two men, good workmen at chairs, would get more orders, accompanied with the cash, than they could fill.

One bedstead maker would be equally fortunate in locating here.

It is so difficult to get joiners, that several persons have been obliged to postpone building, from the impossibility of getting the work done.

A good brickmaker could find ready sales, for several kilns of brick annually. Brick are now brought from Milwaukee here, and cost ten dollars per thousand. But we have as good claybanks as there are at Milwaukee, and the wood can be had for the chopping.

Three or four brick and stone masons and plasterers would find constant employment, at good prices.

A shoemaker, who can stock himself, and keep custom work for sale, would find the business excellent.

A tanner and currier, who wished to open an old fashioned country tannery, on any capital, from two hundred to five thousand dollars, would find this a very desirable location.

A tailor would find constant employment, and prompt pay for after removing a portion of even previous work. If able to keep ready made cloth the debris, he came to two large cupation of Canada. In the ing he would find home sales for stone coffins in perfect preservation, which he caused to be care-

Four or five persons, qualified fully removed to the level ground to peddle merchandise, can make Without attempting to open large profits on small investments, he hastened to the village ments. Each could require a for aid, and there he fortunate boat, costing from $30 to $100, ly met with Mr. Edward Tompand $50 to begin business onkins, one of the Assistant Engineer would serve, though $500 coulders of the Railroad Contractors be invested in such an enterprise, and who still more fortunately. The business is remarkably a-for science, chances to have made dapted to invalids, who wish to-Geology his study.

Returning together to the quar- Four or five persons who canry, they proceeded to open one speak Chippewa, Ottawa or Pot-of the stone coffins, or sarcophagi tawotamic, can learn at this of; which with much difficulty, fee of most desirable openings, and after much labour they of

At this time there is not affected; when to their great as single vessel owned at this place, tonishment, they found the where the trade is sufficient to mains of an Indian man in a thor employ three or four. There are ough state of perfection! -Elated men here able and disposed toas they might well be, with this purchase or build, if they couldimportant discovery. Messrs. get reliable and trustworthy Smith and Tompkins, procure sations to take charge of them. "one of the Railroad trucks, and

A Daguerreotypist, who can do loading it with the precious good work, and is satisfied with freight came post haste to Kings the usual prices, would find thison, where they arrived late in a desirable location. One has the evening, and immediately a desirable location. One has the evening, and immediately

The newspapers have been proclaiming for six years past that the people of these Islands are a set of blacklegs, pirates and robbers. In consequence, every now and then some old scamp, grown gray in iniquity, comes along offering credentials of bad character, and asking fellowship with us. We have no use for such, and don't want them. We beg the publick not to suspect as of offering this as evidence of our own general good character. We are quite indifferent, whether they attribute it to our honesty, or a desire to monopolize all the rogues to those already here.

No man who uses intoxicating liquors need consider himself injured, whatever good qualities he may have. We have had trouble enough with such, and don't wish to try another. We do not wish to invite in men whose intention is to make a fortune, and leave. Of course all can come and go as they like, but we are seeking permanent settlers, who will invest their profits in the development of the resources of this country.

No one need come who imagine for a single moment that the Mormons are one whit behind any body else in intelligence, enterprise, or virtue. We could warrant such a one more homesick in one week than he ever was yet.

POSSIBLE REMAINS OF TWO INDIANS FOUND NEAR NAPANE. The matter so long disputed by Geologists, as to the existence of petrified remains of the human species, has happily and finally been set at rest, through a discovery made near Napanee yesterday, by a party of labourers employed in excavating the Grand Trunk Railroad, preparatory to its crossing the river at that town. It was so late last night when the intelligence reached us, that we fear we will be incorrect in penning all the particulars.

History records a bloody battle, fought on the slopes of the as a party of quarrymen were preparing to blast the limestone Caribs and a few Spaniards were killed, and it is their bodies which are there petrified. A dozen such cases occur fresh to the mind, and the above only adds one to the catalogue.

It is not inferable that these Indians so found were buried as the French of Canada. In the drippings of water through limestone a dead body will become stone as fast as the flesh wastes.

Competence rewards well-directed labour.

WOOD TRADE AT BEAVER ISLAND.

Beaver Island is about 35,000 acres in extent. Of this 12,000 acres, in addition to the 3,000 already cleared, is likely to be cleared during the next ten years, and after reserving such timber as is wanted for building, fencing, and other local improvements, will yield fifty cords of steamboat wood to the acre, equal to 600,000 per 60,000 per year. It is not probable that there will be a market for more than one-third this amount. The rest is likely to be logged and burned, to get off the land. After that period 10,000 acres of timber are sufficient to supply the wants of the inhabitants of the Island, though it should then bear a dense population, and the annual product of 10,000 acres of forest may be sold without impairing the supply.

A forest will renew itself in twenty years. This would admit of cutting 500 acres a year, equal to a supply of 25,000 cords annually. If this timber was not diverted to any other purpose, it would be a long time before the demand for steamboat wood exceeded the supply at this Island. But after 15,000 acres of the best land is cleared, most of the timber on the remaining 20,000 is equally adapted to fencing and building purposes, as to fuel, and the extensive improvement of the prairies in Illinois is rapidly creating a demand for it.

The great number of railroads concentrating at Chicago require an immense supply of fuel. Possibly they may succeed in bringing coal into extensive use for that purpose. But if they do not, they can get their wood and charcoal here as cheap as from any place whatever; and may take off a large surplus of timber, which would otherwise be logged and burned. For many years any demand of that kind will be without effect on the supply for steamboats.

For many years no other place can successfully compete with this in the business. There is no other point near here, on the other side of the lake, furnishing a abundant stock of standing timber, near an accessible harbour, with a back country to support the men and teams employed in getting the wood.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY AT BABYLON.

A London paper states, that Col. Rawlinson has just discovered among the ruins of ancient Babylon an extensive library, not indeed printed on paper, but impressed on baked bricks, containing many and voluminous treatises on astronomy, mathematics, ethnology and several other most important branches of knowledge. These treatises contain facts and arguments which, in his opinion, will have no small operation on the study of the science to which they relate, and which throw great light upon biblical history and criticism, and the history of our race.

MUD, BLOOMERS AND POETRY.

You yesterday noticed, says the Express, a "Bloomer" costume in the street, and it was by far the most convenient drapery we saw promanaging our wet and muddy walks. On the wearer marched, regardless of the splash under foot—over crosswalks and gutters she tripped without a drabble on her skirts. She had the entire use of both her hands while every other lady was

WOOD TRADE AT BEAVER ISLAND.

Beaver Island is about 35,000 acres in extent. Of this 12,000 acres, in addition to the 3,000 already cleared, is likely to be cleared during the next ten years, and after reserving such timber as is wanted for building, fencing, and other local improvements, will yield fifty cords of steamboat wood to the acre, equal to 600,000 per 60,000 per year. It is not probable that there will be a market for more than one-third this amount. The rest is likely to be logged and burned, to get off the land. After that period 10,000 acres of timber are sufficient to supply the wants of the inhabitants of the Island, though it should then bear a dense population, and the annual product of 10,000 acres of forest may be sold without impairing the supply.

A forest will renew itself in twenty years. This would admit of cutting 500 acres a year, equal to a supply of 25,000 cords annually. If this timber was not diverted to any other purpose, it would be a long time before the demand for steamboat wood exceeded the supply at this Island. But after 15,000 acres of the best land is cleared, most of the timber on the remaining 20,000 is equally adapted to fencing and building purposes, as to fuel, and the extensive improvement of the prairies in Illinois is rapidly creating a demand for it.

The great number of railroads concentrating at Chicago require an immense supply of fuel. Possibly they may succeed in bringing coal into extensive use for that purpose. But if they do not, they can get their wood and charcoal here as cheap as from any place whatever; and may take off a large surplus of timber, which would otherwise be logged and burned. For many years any demand of that kind will be without effect on the supply for steamboats.

For many years no other place can successfully compete with this in the business. There is no other point near here, on the other side of the lake, furnishing a abundant stock of standing timber, near an accessible harbour, with a back country to support the men and teams employed in getting the wood.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY AT BABYLON.

A London paper states, that Col. Rawlinson has just discovered among the ruins of ancient Babylon an extensive library, not indeed printed on paper, but impressed on baked bricks, containing many and voluminous treatises on astronomy, mathematics, ethnology and several other most important branches of knowledge. These treatises contain facts and arguments which, in his opinion, will have no small operation on the study of the science to which they relate, and which throw great light upon biblical history and criticism, and the history of our race.

MUD, BLOOMERS AND POETRY.

You yesterday noticed, says the Express, a "Bloomer" costume in the street, and it was by far the most convenient drapery we saw promanaging our wet and muddy walks. On the wearer marched, regardless of the splash under foot—over crosswalks and gutters she tripped without a drabble on her skirts. She had the entire use of both her hands while every other lady was Splashing through the gutters, Trailing through the mire, Mud up to their ankles, And a LITTLE higher! Little boys uproarious, 'Cause they show their pants! Bless me! this is glorious, Sweeping down the streets!

Bonnets on the shoulders, Nose up to the sky, Both hands full of flowers, Raised a La Sans-mou! Underskirts be patterned, Looking amazing neat; All your skirts get "watered," Sweeping down the streets!

SUNDAY, MAY 11, 1856.

We see a letter in the Detroit Free Press from Wendell, the Collector of Mackinac, announcing a little misery, and breeding much for the future.

The man who sold the liquor is among the most respectable in the State; but, by that act, he is not a word of truth in it. A majority of the Super-created widows and orphans are Democratic, but not the evil will never be cured, and not one by a large majority.

There is not a word of truth in it. A majority of the Super-created widows and orphans are Democratic, but not the evil will never be cured, and not one by a large majority. In many of the towns, there are not voters enough to make up two nominations; and turned to bitterness, seeking only in some the number of voters to destroy those who labour in was not equal to the number of officers to be elected. We are him.

If no other mode can be devised to shut the bars of boats while lying at the wharves here, we shall advise a universal combination, not to buy or sell, or have any dealings with those having a bar. There is here and there, in all communities, men who cannot resist temptation. Society owes them protection, as far as in its power.

We learn by the officers of the Michigan that Alden Hale, keeper of the Skilagalee Light, was yesterday arrested in Mackinac. The arrest is malicious and not founded in a serious pretence, having for its sole object to get him removed.

The prosecutors pretended to recognize his boat as one stolen from Gull Island, within the last three or four years, but as it is a Light House boat, furnished by the United States, it is hardly probable that they will show anything more than their malice and corruption.

The Kingdom of Oude, in India, has recently been annexed to the British Empire.

The Brunswick got off without damage.

The steamer Michigan yesterday brought the first mail by water since the ice left. There was only four bushels of mail matter.

By yesterday's mail we get papers from nearly all the organized counties in the State. The spring election generally went decidedly Democratic.

Our friends about Lake Michigan are again receiving accessions to their numbers. A considerable number are here waiting favourable winds to go over.

AN HONEST CLERGYMAN.—The Lowell Courier says that one of our ministers, who recently self, for the use of a Light House, was not stolen property, in the hands of the Keeper.

If such an act had been done at this place, it is not necessary to say what would he and poor people could not afford come of it. If Wendell was to hire them. He added that a church had no moral right to sever under his eye, without attempting to prevent it, he would

Utah is moving for government. The last winter passed an

INTOXICATION.

We are satisfied that no man of any use in society who gets people on the question, and elect drunk, and we never feel sure of delegates to a convention to one who drinks at all. The pro-forma State constitution. The pensity seems to be incurable. The trade in liquors has been of March, if a majority of votes factually broken up here, but were in favour of the change.

Occasionally a boat comes in with a bar, when now and then a luck-severe, we may look to see Utah less sinner gets his supply, and knocking for admission into the consequences are all evil. Union. We are looking with We wish such boats would keep some interest for the spring mails away. They might as well do from that direction. With the business at Mackinac and Washington Island, and let us alone.

Last winter two or three men laid in their private supplies, have been such as to discourage amounting in all to some sixty settlements to some extent.

gallons, and a nest of apostates,

We see a letter in the Detroit Free Press from Wendell, the Collector of Mackinac, announcing a little misery, and breeding much for the future. The man who sold the liquor is among the most respectable in the State; but, by that act, he is not a word of truth in it. A majority of the Super-created widows and orphans are Democratic, but not the evil will never be cured, and not one by a large majority.

There is not a word of truth in it. A majority of the Super-created widows and orphans are Democratic, but not the evil will never be cured, and not one by a large majority. In many of the towns, there are not voters enough to make up two nominations; and turned to bitterness, seeking only in some the number of voters to destroy those who labour in was not equal to the number of officers to be elected. We are him.

If no other mode can be devised to shut the bars of boats while lying at the wharves here, we shall advise a universal combination, not to buy or sell, or have any dealings with those having a bar. There is here and there, in all communities, men who cannot resist temptation. Society owes them protection, as far as in its power.

We learn by the officers of the Michigan that Alden Hale, keeper of the Skilagalee Light, was yesterday arrested in Mackinac. The arrest is malicious and not founded in a serious pretence, having for its sole object to get him removed.

The prosecutors pretended to recognize his boat as one stolen from Gull Island, within the last three or four years, but as it is a Light House boat, furnished by the United States, it is hardly probable that they will show anything more than their malice and corruption.

The Kingdom of Oude, in India, has recently been annexed to the British Empire.

The Brunswick got off without damage.

The steamer Michigan yesterday brought the first mail by water since the ice left. There was only four bushels of mail matter.

By yesterday's mail we get papers from nearly all the organized counties in the State. The spring election generally went decidedly Democratic.

Our friends about Lake Michigan are again receiving accessions to their numbers. A considerable number are here waiting favourable winds to go over.

AN HONEST CLERGYMAN.—The Lowell Courier says that one of our ministers, who recently self, for the use of a Light House, was not stolen property, in the hands of the Keeper.

If such an act had been done at this place, it is not necessary to say what would he and poor people could not afford come of it. If Wendell was to hire them. He added that a church had no moral right to sever under his eye, without attempting to prevent it, he would

Utah is moving for government. The last winter passed an

INTOXICATION.

We are satisfied that no man of any use in society who gets people on the question, and elect drunk, and we never feel sure of delegates to a convention to one who drinks at all. The pro-forma State constitution. The pensity seems to be incurable. The trade in liquors has been of March, if a majority of votes factually broken up here, but were in favour of the change.

Occasionally a boat comes in with a bar, when now and then a luck-severe, we may look to see Utah less sinner gets his supply, and knocking for admission into the consequences are all evil. Union. We are looking with We wish such boats would keep some interest for the spring mails away. They might as well do from that direction. With the business at Mackinac and Washington Island, and let us alone.

Last winter two or three men laid in their private supplies, have been such as to discourage amounting in all to some sixty settlements to some extent.

CAUSE OF THE DELUGE.

Men of science have often insisted that no such deluge as that recorded in Genesis ever could have occurred, and asked triumphantly, where did the water come from?

In Dec., 1850, Mr. Strang published a treatise on the subject, putting forward the theory that the earth was originally surrounded with rings as one of the superior planets is, and that the deluge was produced by the precipitation of the rings.

This treatise has been republished, but created no interest among men of science; but during the last year some European has started it anew, and Astronomers and Geologists are turning their attention to it. Science will yet vindicate what the Seer alone could discern. Science often does these things.

ON EXHIBITION.—Those licksticks. Why not exhibit the poker also? Tell the loafer's tale to the world's end, but don't leave out the black girl's.

N. B. No charge for the sight, and the lecture free.

Clinton, April 16, '56.

DEAR SIR:—A copy of the "Northern Islander" came to me with a notice marked that you had published a prospectus of my publications, and had not received a copy, according to promise. But if you sent the paper containing the prospectus, it was overlooked, or never reached me, as I never saw it. I now enter the Northern Islander on my books, and send what back numbers I have.

Yours, respectfully,
T. B. MINER.
by L. S. W.

Rural American received, and an interesting paper it is. All right, Mr. Miner.

The Peace of Paris is unsatisfactory in England and Austria, but popular in France and Russia.

Statement of the whole number of votes cast at the special election held in the several organized townships of the county of Manitowish, the 7th day of April, 1856, for the election of county officers of said county, to fill vacancies; of the officers for which said votes were cast, and of the several persons for whom they were cast. Made by the Board of Canvassers of said county, pursuant to law, the 14th day of April, 1856:

Names of officers.	Names of persons against whom votes.	Number of votes.
Sheriff,	George Miller,	112
County Clerk,	Edgar Chidester,	112
Register of Deeds,	Edgar Chidester,	112
County Treasurer,	Samuel Wright,	112
Judge of Probate,	Phineas Wright,	112
Prosecuting Attorney,	Phineas Wright,	112
Circuit Court Commissioner,	James J. Strang,	112
County Surveyor,	James J. Strang,	112
Inspector of Vails,	James J. Strang,	112
Inspector of Staves,	James J. Strang,	112
Coroners,	James J. Strang,	112

We certify the foregoing to be a true statement.
DENNIS CHIDESTER,
Ch'n of Board of Supervisors.

GILBERT WATSON,
Clerk of the Board.

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 1856.

WRONG ALTOGETHER.

The Northern Islander is greatly mistaken in asserting that we published and recommended several chapters of the work recently published by Derby, entitled "Female Life Among the Mormons." We have never even seen the work. What we published was a series of articles from Putnam's Magazine, written by G. Ferris, wife of the late Secretary for Utah. They have been issued in book form by Messrs. Dix & Edwards, and that Mormons should utterly of such publication is not wonder. What is published by Derby we know not; but the articles we published in our paper were from a highly respectable source; and bore evident marks of truthfulness. True, they showed a fearful state of wickedness in the great headquarters of the "Latter Day Saints." But nothing worse than we should expect, as the natural result of the Mormon system.—Lansing Republican.

We stand corrected by the Republican in this matter, and are happy to be able to give its correction a place in our columns. The Republican will allow us to add that we have not seen Mrs Ferris' book, but have only glanced over a few columns of the articles in the Republican, and from the tea-table tattle-tale style in which they were written, really took it to be the same work, entitled, "Female Life Among the Mormons," of which we have read here and there a scattering page. But if Mrs. Ferris' work is not more reliable than B. G. Ferris' "Utah and the Mormons," this correction does not help the case of the Republican. That work we have carefully read, and compared page by page with the authorities referred to by the author in support of it, and found many of its authorities forgeries, and its most important statements of Mormon history most thoroughly falsified by the very books referred to in support of them.

A review of a few pages of Ferris' Utah and the Mormons appeared in the Daily Islander of April 1st, in which these facts were shown in detail. We shall not go over that ground again, but send a marked copy to the Republican by the mail which takes this. The proof sheets of that review were submitted to Mr. Ferris, with an offer to publish along with it whatever he might wish to say in defence of his work, and he says nothing. We are accordingly putting in circulation 10,000 copies, intending to follow his work wherever it goes.

ICE.

The Capt. of the steamer Niagara reports fields of ice in Lake Huron yesterday, (12th May,) some of which was in heavy cakes, blue as in January. The Niagara also passed extensive fields of ice in Lake Erie. There has been none in Lake Michigan for more than a week.

The Elders who were out on missions last winter are generally returned, and, to some extent, we have published brief reports of their missions, which we propose to continue as we find room.

On the whole our missions have been very successful, but there are two facts in these results with which we are more pleased than any other. In Livingston county, Michigan, the most unwearied pains had been taken to prejudice the public against the Mormons. The Livingston Courier has kept up a continual howl against us, and the father of J. S. Dickson has been perambulating the county peddling tracts and tales of Mormon atrocities among the people.

Two Elders, Phineas and Samuel Wright, had their mission there, and they have come up with large numbers of converts, the fruits of their labour, and left numerous believers behind to continue the work.

The other fact is, that in the Indian country, where the Brighamites had made a great display and boasted their success with a mission of sixteen Elders, we sent in three who were well received by the nation, and made a successful mission, preaching at the capital and all the principal towns, and making a goodly number of converts; but the Brighamites have been compelled to discontinue preaching, and have made no converts, but one family of free negroes.

In our advertising columns will be found a catalogue of books, published by Fowlers and Wells, which deserves the attention of those wishing books by mail. We believe that Gilbert Watson acts as agent for that house.

SEED POTATOES.

If you wish to secure a large yield of large potatoes, plant only a moderate amount of seed. The seed ends are no more fit for seed than the tips of corn ears.

There was a slight frost this morning. No damage done.

The stock brought on this spring is splendid, and will make an improvement in cattle breeding here.

MONDAY, MAY 19, 1856.

Is that an apostasy? Last summer a man came up from the interior of Michigan, and settled here, saying he wished to be a Mormon, and to live and do as the rest of us did. He was continually fidgeting around, wishing to find out something which he seemed to think all the rest must know, and which was very important for him to learn. Not obtaining the desired information in the ordinary way, he undertook boring for it by saying he was not reputed very honest, but he always stuck to his friends, and that he knew some things as well as others.

As soon as spring came he left, giving as a reason that he could not support his family here. But when he got among his old friends, the cat was out of the bag. "The Mormons were just as tenacious of their religion as any body else." He never believed a word of it, and did not suppose they did, till he got there. But they were too honest for him; he believed every child suspected him of being a hypocrite.

TO THE SAINTS SCATTERED ABROAD, GREETING:—I am in continual remembrance of you, and the past labours of some of you who have laboured in the ministry of God, and have been successful in bringing many to the knowledge of the truth, but left off preaching the gospel and returned to the ordinary avocations of life: some to the law, some to the practice of medicine, some to the mercantile business, and some to the plow, so that your minds are absorbed in things of the world, and do not think of the duty that is involved upon you as ministers of God; that inasmuch as the work is true, there will be souls required at your hands; for truly the harvest is ripe, and the labourers are few.

I will say to you, remember the revelation that says it is a day of warning, and not a day of many words. Therefore let every man warn his neighbour and flee to Zion, the place that God has appointed by his servant James, for the gathering of his people, and where there is safety from the destruction that has gone forth to stir up the nations to war and blood.

God has given us a good land, so that we can raise all kinds of crops that will grow in the northern States. Corn is the poorest crop, in proportion to all other kinds, but generally yields from twenty to thirty bushels per acre, with very little labour. Wheat crop is good, and never winter-kills. Oats and buckwheat are more than an extra good crop. Potatoes and turnips are the best I have ever seen. All kinds of vegetables can be produced with as little labour as in any of the northern States. And, what is good degree of interest for our better than all, God has fulfilled the promise spoken by one of old, that he would convert the abundance of the sea to the benefit of the Saints; for the fishermen and sisters who live in the vicinity of Detroit and Pontiac, never was as good as it has been within the last two years past.

The Saints cut their timber in Great Britain, and began preaching, and to my joy I had more than I could possibly attend to in one town or neighbourhood before it could be said by some one, come over into our place and preach; my doors are open.

I never was used better in any land. I speak of the general history of my mission; for no one expects to find all things, nor all men, perfect while sin abounds. On several occasions I was (or our an need to want if he will work gospel) attacked by ministers of the church, but they were the quite willing to let us alone, after a little acquaintance with the oppression of the world, whereas and the gospel we preach. You can have justice done you. You will recollect our report of '55, how that we were chased by Sheriffs and others; and could children can be educated among the Saints, and where the Sabbath schools are taught by those where we were thus threatened who are ordained and set apart we have many warm friends, and for that purpose; where you can I do hope some will yet sell their large possessions, and come up to the Kingdom of God.

We traveled through a section of country about one hundred miles in length, and as we traveled we were everywhere giving the gospel, and were ready to debate our faith with any respectable minister who was prepared to meet the Lord Jesus and observe the general rules of Christ, that it need not be said discussion. Some promised to gain the foxes have holes, and come out, but when the time came the birds of the air have nests, they were not on hand. As to our doctrine or the doctrine we preached, we endeavored to teach the sayings of modern as well as ancient prophets, and we found it had good effect; though we said little about the word of wisdom, yet we observed and wait no longer, for the spirit of it. Elder Thornton gave a sermon now and then on the Book of Mormon, which took and the whole shipping interest, and the lives of our hardy lake mariners placed at the mercy of a man who professes to believe that what belongs to the "heathen" belongs to the Lord, and what belongs to the Lord belongs to the Mormons, as his chosen people.

As to our doctrine or the doctrine we preached, we endeavored to teach the sayings of modern as well as ancient prophets, and we found it had good effect; though we said little about the word of wisdom, yet we observed and wait no longer, for the spirit of it. Elder Thornton gave a sermon now and then on the Book of Mormon, which took and the whole shipping interest, and the lives of our hardy lake mariners placed at the mercy of a man who professes to believe that what belongs to the "heathen" belongs to the Lord, and what belongs to the Lord belongs to the Mormons, as his chosen people.

Yours,
L. D. HICKEY.
TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1856.

ARREST OF THE BALEES. We have a letter from the Keeper of the Skilago Light House, concerning his arrest at Mackinac, which we should be glad to publish, but we find room for nothing but rather prolix. It seems that one Martin made a complaint that some unknown person or persons, had stolen a boat from him last summer, and that Alden and Charles Lake, Keeper and Assistant Keeper of the Skilago Light, were the persons who had stolen the boat, and identified it as the Skilago Light House boat. They employed counsel, and went to trial. The Magistrate seeing that the complaint could not be sustained, suppressed it, and proposed to take a new one, but, after a variety of conflicting decisions, discharged them. They immediately left for the Light House, accompanied by John A. Raymond, but were pursued by a boat containing four men. As they had to beat against a head wind, the two boats fell out of the game, and once came within thirty feet of each other, and the pursuing played out, calls for a notice.

PHINEAS WRIGHT, REPORT OF THE CANADA MISSION.

DEAR BRETHRE:—I drop a few lines that you and others of the Saints may know of the prosperity of the cause of God in Canada. I left the home of the Saints Nov. 12, '55 took passage on board the propeller Potomac for Detroit; had a pleasant time, and were treated kindly by officers and crew, some of whom conversed quite freely on the doctrine held by ancient and modern Saints.

I can but relate upon the past and present state of feeling while passing up and down the waters of Michigan and Huron. A few years ago Latter Day Saints could hardly be treated as human by the traveling public, while at the present the officers and proprietors of boats seem to feel a good degree of interest for our welfare. To God and his anointed be the praise.

I landed in Detroit on the 15th, and after visiting with my brethren Dunkirk came along, and the Hales made for her for residence Light was turned out for the boat from Mackinac, the cargo of a Racine vessel wrecked on Skilago a few years ago last fall, he having taken them out of the firm of Head, Camp, and made their arrests. Having bell & Head, of Kenosha, Wis., the presence of a disinterested party alarmed them.

While in this position the Propeller Dunkirk came along, and the Hales made for her for residence Light was turned out for the boat from Mackinac, the cargo of a Racine vessel wrecked on Skilago a few years ago last fall, he having taken them out of the firm of Head, Camp, and made their arrests. Having bell & Head, of Kenosha, Wis., the presence of a disinterested party alarmed them.

VESSEL ASHORE—FOUL PLAY EXPECTED—FRUITS OF A CORRUPT BARGAIN.

A gentleman just arrived from Grand Traverse Bay, reports a large hermaphrodite brig on the reef south of Legale Island, near Little Traverse. The injured parties put their Indians represent, as we learn papers in Mr. Strang's hands to prosecute his removal, but though went ashore on Friday week, and she has been stripped of sails and rigging, and is apparently abandoned. Being bound down, she is supposed to have been loaded with wheat, flour, beef, &c., which will make her fine plunder for any band of land pirates who have their headquarters on Beaver Island, and who style themselves "consecrators," and claim, as the Lord's anointed, every thing belonging to the "gentiles" which they can get hold of by hook or by crook. It will be recollected that Mr. Davenport, who had been Keeper of the Light House on this Island for many years, and an honest and faithful man, and a good Democrat, was turned out of that office five or six weeks since, and a man from Beaver Island, one of the Mormon saints, appointed in his place. This is supposed to be in accordance with the condition of a contract between a certain Nebraska member of Congress and King Strang, that the latter should give the aforesaid Nebraska candidate a 650 majority among the Mormons, and the Congressman in turn should give Mr. Davenport's place to one of the "Saints."

Mr. Strang having complied with his part of the bargain, and thrown in almost fifty votes to make good measure, demanded his reward. After a long delay it has been paid, a faithful officer and good Democrat sacrificed, and the whole shipping interest, and the lives of our hardy lake mariners placed at the mercy of a man who professes to believe that what belongs to the "heathen" belongs to the Lord, and what belongs to the Lord belongs to the Mormons, as his chosen people.

Whether the Light House on Isle Legale was kept properly "trimmed and burning" on the night in question, has not been ascertained, nor will the fact ever be known unless the crew of the wrecked brig should fortunately have escaped with their lives. The story is certain, however, which is that every intelligent man of Mackinac, Grand Traverse, and all that region of country, pronounced that a great wrong was being done, and that the boat, after the change which we have spoken, was made.

One essential fact in this case is, that the corrupt transaction, how many means have, of which no knowledge has ever been obtained, or how many more may be known, it is impossible to tell. It may be that all is right—except the knavery connected with the removal of an honest Democrat, and the appointment of this Mormon, and that this wreck is purely accidental, or the result of ignorance or carelessness on the part of the present keeper. But this does not relieve the man, who, to procure a seat in Congress, or the administration who ratified the supposed bargain between him and the Mormon "King," from being held responsible for every vessel lost and every life sacrificed on the Light House, accompanied by reef where the unknown brig John A. Raymond, but were pursued by a boat containing four men. As they had to beat against a head wind, the two boats fell out of the game, and once came within thirty feet of each other, and the pursuing played out, calls for a notice.

Davenport is not an old and honest Democrat turned out to be would shoot. Charles Hale-Mormon or otherwise. He was faced him with a revolver, and a new incumbent, slipped in by in that position the boats slowly the usual game of Mackinac, of getting any place in the upper separated.

The old Keeper of the Skilago Light was turned out for the boat from Mackinac, the cargo of a Racine vessel wrecked on Skilago a few years ago last fall, he having taken them out of the firm of Head, Camp, and made their arrests. Having bell & Head, of Kenosha, Wis., the presence of a disinterested party alarmed them.

WRECK OF A CORRUPT BARGAIN.

A gentleman just arrived from Grand Traverse Bay, reports a large hermaphrodite brig on the reef south of Legale Island, near Little Traverse. The injured parties put their Indians represent, as we learn papers in Mr. Strang's hands to prosecute his removal, but though she has been stripped of sails and rigging, and is apparently abandoned. Being bound down, she is supposed to have been loaded with wheat, flour, beef, &c., which will make her fine plunder for any band of land pirates who have their headquarters on Beaver Island, and who style themselves "consecrators," and claim, as the Lord's anointed, every thing belonging to the "gentiles" which they can get hold of by hook or by crook. It will be recollected that Mr. Davenport, who had been Keeper of the Light House on this Island for many years, and an honest and faithful man, and a good Democrat, was turned out of that office five or six weeks since, and a man from Beaver Island, one of the Mormon saints, appointed in his place. This is supposed to be in accordance with the condition of a contract between a certain Nebraska member of Congress and King Strang, that the latter should give the aforesaid Nebraska candidate a 650 majority among the Mormons, and the Congressman in turn should give Mr. Davenport's place to one of the "Saints."

Mr. Strang having complied with his part of the bargain, and thrown in almost fifty votes to make good measure, demanded his reward. After a long delay it has been paid, a faithful officer and good Democrat sacrificed, and the whole shipping interest, and the lives of our hardy lake mariners placed at the mercy of a man who professes to believe that what belongs to the "heathen" belongs to the Lord, and what belongs to the Lord belongs to the Mormons, as his chosen people.

Whether the Light House on Isle Legale was kept properly "trimmed and burning" on the night in question, has not been ascertained, nor will the fact ever be known unless the crew of the wrecked brig should fortunately have escaped with their lives. The story is certain, however, which is that every intelligent man of Mackinac, Grand Traverse, and all that region of country, pronounced that a great wrong was being done, and that the boat, after the change which we have spoken, was made.

One essential fact in this case is, that the corrupt transaction, how many means have, of which no knowledge has ever been obtained, or how many more may be known, it is impossible to tell. It may be that all is right—except the knavery connected with the removal of an honest Democrat, and the appointment of this Mormon, and that this wreck is purely accidental, or the result of ignorance or carelessness on the part of the present keeper. But this does not relieve the man, who, to procure a seat in Congress, or the administration who ratified the supposed bargain between him and the Mormon "King," from being held responsible for every vessel lost and every life sacrificed on the Light House, accompanied by reef where the unknown brig John A. Raymond, but were pursued by a boat containing four men. As they had to beat against a head wind, the two boats fell out of the game, and once came within thirty feet of each other, and the pursuing played out, calls for a notice.

Davenport is not an old and honest Democrat turned out to be would shoot. Charles Hale-Mormon or otherwise. He was faced him with a revolver, and a new incumbent, slipped in by in that position the boats slowly the usual game of Mackinac, of getting any place in the upper separated.

WRECK OF A CORRUPT BARGAIN.

A gentleman just arrived from Grand Traverse Bay, reports a large hermaphrodite brig on the reef south of Legale Island, near Little Traverse. The injured parties put their Indians represent, as we learn papers in Mr. Strang's hands to prosecute his removal, but though Chicago, Ill.

The house of the Prindle brothers was entered last night, and some $200 worth of Da-Buffalo from Syracuse with salt, guereotype apparatus, stock, &c., little will be done on the Lakes, spirited away. The object seems and business will not be brisk until merchandise arrives from New York; say 20th May.

Two doctors left here yesterday, and to-day two or three ignorant persons say they are on an errand of mischief. After taking a drink, they may be such fools, but they are likely to do more mischief to themselves than any body else. Getting up a new persecution would be an uphill business at this time.

Lake Mormon opened for navigation the 27th April, and the 30th the last ice disappeared.

There has been a serious riot at Panama, in which several Americans lost their lives. The United States take the matter in hand.

There is a prospect that the United States will recognize the government of Gen. Walker, in Central America.

S. S. Whalon, one of the Commissioners of the New York canals, gives notice that the western division will not be opened till May 12th, notwithstanding the resolution of the Board to open the 5th.

A late Toronto paper says the Collingwood line will consist of the same boats as last year.

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1856.

REPORTS OF THE RETURNING ELDERS.

Warren Post, of the Twelve, has returned from his mission to Illinois. He has preached in Coles and Shelby counties. R. F. Mills was with him a short time, and left for Ohio, where he had a successful mission. J. S. Comstock was also with him a short time, and went to St. Louis.

Bro. Post's labours were attended with a moderate share of success, though he met with bitter opposition. Several times he was threatened with mobs, but by prudent conduct he avoided them. But the spirit of mobocracy reigned supreme. At Elgin, the county seat of their own modes of thinking was held there. A special election was held at the same time a man was hanged by a mob, because they could not brook the law's delay. Many who joined in it had no inducement but the sport of seeing a man hung, and regardless whether he was guilty or innocent of crime.

Bro. Post's labours brought a few to the knowledge of the truth, and one worthy family to the love of it, and good promise for a few others. He had his family with him, and was received with indifference by the people generally.

S. S. Thornton, of the Seventy, has returned from the Canada mission, with a small company of emigrants. L. D. Hickey, of the Twelve, from the same mission, was in Detroit, waiting for some of his company, and is probably on his way. Their mission has been successful.

Difficulties have broken out anew in Kansas. Jones, who the mock Legislature imposed on Douglas county as Sheriff, backed by Gov. Shannon, attempted to make arrests for violations of the bogus laws, and was assisted by a file of U. S. soldiers. Arrests were made at Lawrence without resistance; but some person, unknown, shot the Sheriff the following night, and he is not expected to recover.

The 5th day of May was fixed doctrine which exempts the Territory from the yoke of Congressional legislation.

The handbill referred to in above letter, commences in the following type, as follows. The slave appears to have been 'so' running.

"TAKE NOTICE.—As I have sold my negro man Cato to the Hon. W. W. Drummond, of this city, and for whom I recently offered $100 reward for his delivery to me: I now take this opportunity of informing the public that as I am about to leave the Territory, I will no longer be held responsible for said reward, and man Cato being the property of said Judge Drummond.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Evangeline, May 3d, '56.

Bro. J. J. STRANGE.—I take my pen to inform you that we are all well, and of matters and things in general since arriving here. I left St. James 24th last Sept., and arrived at this place the 26th. We had a pleasant and healthy winter here. I measured the snow three or four times during the winter, and found it did not exceed two feet in depth. We keep up common schools here, and also Sabbath schools. I have, during the winter, chopped over considerable ground, got out some timber for a saw mill for Wm. Bickle & Co., made one canoe and some sugar.

Our township was set off by the Board of Supervisors last Oct., and the first township meeting held at my house on the first Tuesday in April, and the township fully organized. We have a fine country of land, healthy, and well watered. There is no more pine timber than will be needed for building, and I think not enough for that, as far as I have seen yet.

We have had a number of visits from the Indians. They appear very friendly. Some stayed over night with us, and others only for a few hours. One came here for me to set a patch on his boot, which I did. He brought five and half pounds of sugar to pay for it. I took my pay for setting the patch, and bought the rest.

R. T. NICHOLS.

FRIDAY, MAY 9, 1856.

SLAVERY IN UTAH.

Slavery has finally fixed itself upon Utah as a domestic institution, and the slave trade is a lawful commerce, and it will soon be a popular vote for Democratic or Comstock was also with him a short time, and went to St. Louis.

Such is not the fact. The ex-popular vote is as nearly unanimous as it well could be.

Electors were held in three of the four towns in Manitoba, Pease, Galt, and Pat. We have not heard from them. We have not heard from them. We have not heard from them.

Washington, April 29, '56.

The workings of popular sovereignty in Utah are recently shown by the introduction of slavery and the slave trade. The Mormons of that Territory, not content with polygamy, desire to extend the application of Don Croche, La Croix or Old Mackinac, and presume no elections were held there. Our old friend and neighbour, Wm. Bickle, was elected Clerk and Register of Deeds, in place of G. T. Preston, deceased.

These elections indicate nothing as to politics. Not an official has been elected on political grounds.

OLD WEATHER AT PENRINA.

Mr. Burdick, Member of the House from Pembina, informs us that he has received a letter from Pembina, stating that unprecedented cold weather has been experienced in that region this winter. The mercury in the thermometer for a week averaged 52 degrees below zero. The half breeds, who had started out on their winter hunt, were compelled to return to the settlement, owing to the severity of the weather, and they had also lost cattle and numerous horses from the same cause.—St. Paul Democrat, Feb. 6.

It is stated that Russian Journals will shortly be allowed to enter France, as before the war.

COMMERCIAL.

REVIEW OF THE MARKET.

May 12th.

Flour.—Flour has suddenly come down to $6.50 for best Michigan at retail. WHEAT.—Wheat is dull. $1.25 is yet asked for the best quality, but finds no takers. Holders will be obliged to submit to a material reduction. CORN.—There is a good supply of corn for use, but scarcely any for sale. It rates at 75 cts to $1.00. OATS.—Oats are worth 50 cts. per bushel. Oats in the bundle are worth 4 to 5 cts.

BUCKWHEAT.—This grain is rather plenty but finds a ready sale at 75 cts. BEANS.—Good beans are rather scarce, at $2.00 to $2.50, and in request. POTATOES.—Potatoes sell yet at 50 cts, but with a tendency upward. There are considerable quantities for export, and the price in other markets will determine the price here.

PORK.—Pork sells at $18 per bbl., and 11 cts. per pound. BUTTER.—Nominally butter is worth 25 cts., but there is little for sale at any price, and some who are making small quantities for sale, choose to part with it at a less price.

LARD.—Lard is nominal at 14 cts., and fits on the market. EGGS.—Fresh eggs are abundant at 19 cts., with a downward tendency.

Wool.—Steamboat wool, near the wharves, sells at $1.75 to $2.00, and the quantity is larger than any past season, and of excellent quality. It is understood that the trade will open at $2.25 to the boats. We have made considerable efforts to ascertain the quantity got out on all the islands, but without satisfactory result. It is reported that there is an increased supply on both the Manitowish and Beaver islands. At Beaver there is a material increase, and so far as we have been able to make personal observations, an improvement in the quality. Five wharves will be in the wool trade at Beaver, and we presume two at North Manitowish, and one at South.

FISH.—The quantity of fish marketed here by the traders for the spring market is not as large as usual, and they have purchased very few during the winter. The quantity in the hands of the fishermen is, on the contrary, unprecedentedly large. Spring fishing commenced 29th April.

SUPPLIES.—The supply on hand is very small, and the demand for home consumption large. Nominally, good shingles are worth $2.50 per m., but they cannot be had to supply the home market at that price.

STAVES.—There is not a stock of staves for one tenth the summer wants. Within six weeks after fishing commences barrels will be made of what is now growing timber, and they are likely to be difficult to obtain, and in receipt of an extensive assortment of spring and summer goods, in his usual variety.

He will have the largest and best assortment of ready made clothing ever offered in the fishing regions.

IN consequence of the great increase of this business, he has sent an associate to New York to select a still larger assortment of goods, which will be received here as soon as they can come through the Erie Canal.

Cash paid for fish and furs, Saint James, May 1st, 1856. 70c.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

The following publications are constantly for sale at this office, and will be sent by mail, free of postage, on receipt of the price, by the publishers.

"The Prophetical Discourse," being a full and complete exposition of the Prophecy of the Latter Day Saints, 44 pages. Quarto. Price, 20 cts.

The "New Dispensation," eight letters by Oliver Cowdrey. Quarto. Price, 20 cts.

The "Diamond, or Law of Prophecy," 20 pages. 8vo. Price, 5 cts.

We shall issue in May next, "Sacred Homes," a small volume, selected for the use of the Latter Day Saints, 172 pages. Price, in one Morocco binding, 50 cts.

This is printed, folded and ready for the binder.

Also, the "Law of the Lord," being a translation from the Egyptian of the Law given to Moses in Sinai, with numerous and valuable additions, 320 to 350 pages. 8vo. Price, in calf, $2.00.

M. M. Aldrich is in trade at his old stand, ready to serve his customers, on his usual accommodating terms.

A splendid assortment of dry goods, shawls, goods, &c., and a large stock of salt for fish packing, are expected on the first boats from below.

Wood and fish purchased at all times, and the highest price paid. Troy, May 1st, 1856. 70c.

THE OLD SOUTH PIER.

This splendid wharf has been greatly extended during the past winter, and is stocked with the largest and best stock of steamboat wood ever offered along the Lakes, which I offer to Steamboats at the lowest price of the trade on Beaver Island.

M. M. ALDRICH. Troy, May 1st, 1856. 70c.

COOPERAGE.

O. P. Briggs carries on the coopering business at the old North-West Establishment, where he is always prepared to serve his customers on the most liberal terms.

He has a large stock of half barrels for fish packing on hand, and will continue the manufacture with dispatch.

Special orders filled promptly. Saint James, May 4th, 1856. 11c.

C. E. & L. BREWER. DEALERS AND SHIPPERS IN FURS, WOOL AND SHEEPSKINS. DETROIT, MICHIGAN. Cash advances made on consignment.

J. M. Wait, Saint James, purchases for this house, and pays cash at all times. Saint James, Mich., April 28, '56. 21c.

STEAMBOAT WOOD.

B. G. Wright, at Galilee, will be prepared to open trade in the spring with 3,000 cords of best body wood, beech and maple, on wharf and beach, and facilities of bringing forward at the rate of 30 cords per day during the season.

This wharf is greatly extended, and in the best possible condition for the accommodation of boats.

Galilee, March 8, '56. 11c.

LOST YAWLS.

I have a vessel's yawl, which came ashore on Garden Island, now in good repair, which the owner can have by paying for saving it, and for this notice.

Also a steamboat's yawl, which I picked up and repaired, which the owner can have by paying the reasonable charges.

JOHN KINWABINKISHA. Garden Island, May 7th, '56. 12c.

GOOD BOOKS BY MAIL.

PUBLISHED BY FOWLER & WELLS, 308, BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

In order to accommodate "The People," residing in all parts of the United States, the undersigned publishers will forward by return of the first mail, any book named in the following list. The postage will be pre-paid by them, at the New York office.

By this arrangement pre-paying postage 65 cts in advance, fifty per cent will be saved to the purchaser. All letters containing orders should be post-paid, and directed as follows:

FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, New York.

DEFENCE OF PHRENOLOGY.—Containing an Essay on the nature and value of phrenological evidences, also an able vindication of phrenology. By Boardman. Price 87 cents.

DOMESTIC LIFE.—Thoughts on its concord and discord, with valuable hints and suggestions. By N. Suizer. Price 16 cents.

EDUCATION. ITS ELEMENTARY PRINCIPLES founded on the nature of man. By J. G. Spurzheim, with an appendix, and containing a description of the Temperaments, and an analysis of the phrenological faculties. Price 87 cents. We regard this volume as one of the most important that has been offered to the public for many years.—(Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.)

Lectures on Phrenology.—By George Combe, with notes, an Essay on the phrenological mode of investigation, an historical sketch, by Dr. Boardman. Illustrations. Price, 21 cents.

MARRIAGE: ITS HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY.—A phrenological and physiological exposition of the functions and qualifications necessary for happy marriages. Illustrated. Price, 75 cents.

MEMORY AND INTELLECTUAL IMPROVEMENT.—applied to the selection of congenial companions for life; including directions to the married for living together affectionately and happily. Price, 30 cents.

PHRENOLOGY PROVED. Illustrated and applied, accompanied by a chart, embracing an analysis of the primary mental powers in their various degrees of development, the phenomena produced by their combined activity, and the location of the phrenological organs; together with a view of the moral, theological bearing of the science. Price, $1.25.

WOMAN IN ALL AGES AND NATIONS: an authentic history, from the earliest ages. Paper, 62 cents; muslin, 87 cents.

HYDROPATHIC FAMILY PHYSICIAN: a ready prescriber and hygienic adviser, with reference to the nature, causes, prevention and treatment of diseases, accidents and casualties of every kind; with a glossary, table of contents, and index; illustrated with three hundred engravings. By J. C. Shaw, M. D., one large volume of 820 pages, selectively bound. Price, pre-paid by mail, $2.50.

HYDROPHIC ENCYCLOPEDIA: a system of hydrophathy and hygiene; containing outlines of anatomy, physiology of the human body, hygiene, general, and the preservation of health, and hydrophathy; cookery, theory and practice of water-treatment; special pathology, and hydrotherapeutics, including the nature, cause, symptoms, and treatment of all known diseases; application of hydrophathy to midwifery and nursing, designed as a guide to families and students, and text-book for physicians. By Dr. T. Trall, M. D. Illustrated with upwards of three hundred engravings and colored plates; substantially bound. Price, pre-paid, by mail, $3.00. This is the most comprehensive and popular work yet published on the subject of hydrophathy.

Such a wide popularity, as issued by Fowler & Wells, perhaps none are more adapted to general and useful than this rich, comprehensive, and well arranged Encyclopedia.—[N. Y. Tribune.]

PRACTICE OF WATER-CURE. Containing a detailed account of the various processes used in the water-treatment, etc. Price, 20 cents.

PHILOSOPHY OF WATER-CURE: A Development of the true principles of health and longevity. By Baharie. Price, 30 cents.

NEW HYDROPATHIC COOK BOOK. By Dr. T. Trall, M. D.; a system of cookery on hydrophathic principles, containing an exposition of the true relation of all alimentary substances to health, with receipts for preparing all appropriate dishes for hydrophathic establishments, vegetarian boarding houses, private families, &c., &c. It is the cook's complete guide for all who want to live." Paper, 62 cents; muslin, 87 cents.

SCIENCE OF SWIMMING. With instructions to learners; illustrated, 15 cents.

WATER CURE IN AMERICA. Over three hundred cases of various diseases treated with water; with cases of domestic practice. Price, $1.25.

WATER CURE applied to every known Disease: a new theory; a complete demonstration of the hydrophathic system of curing diseases; showing also the fallacy of the allopathic method; and its utter inability to effect a permanent cure. With appendix containing the Hydrophathic diet, and rules for bathing. Price 87 cents.

WATER CURE Manual: a popular work embracing descriptions of the various modes of bathing, hygienic and curative effect of water-drink, &c., &c., together with descriptions of diseases and the hydrophathic remedies. By Dr. Shaw. Price 87 cents.

WATER CURE Almanac. Illustrated, 6 cents.

CONCISE PHYSIOLOGY, applied to the preservation of health, and to the improvement of physical and mental education. With notes by O. S. Fowler. Price 87 cents.

CHRONIC DISEASES: especially the nervous diseases of women. From the German. Price, 30 cents.

FOOD AND DIET: with observations on the diet regimen suited to disordered states, of the digestive organs; and an account of the dietaries of some of the principal metropolises and other establishments; proprietors, lunatics, criminals, children, &c., &c. By Perina. Price, $1.25.

THEORY OF POPULATION: deduced from the general law of animal fertility. Introduced by Dr. Trall. Price 15 cents.

Either of these works may be ordered and received by return of the first mail, postage pre-paid by the publishers. Please send the amount in bank notes or postage stamps, and address all orders pre-paid, to Fowler & Wells, 308 Broadway, New York.

FROM UTAH.
Indian Depredations—Cold Weather—
The Peculiar Institutions of Utah, &c.
GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
March, 1856.

Mr. Editor:—The departure of Mr. Hockaday with the Western mail to-day affords me an opportunity of writing direct.

Indian depredations continue, and stock had been driven off by them, and several persons have been killed. In some of the settlements partial measures have been taken to regain the stolen cattle, but the usual pacific policy of Gov. Young is likely to be maintained towards them until a necessity compels an opposite course to be pursued.

A chief named Samish Head, who had been arrested on writ issued by the U. S. District Court, cut his throat with a knife that had been given him to eat his bread and meat.

The weather is becoming more pleasant in this valley, which is the lowest in the basin, but in the other valleys and the mountains, the winter continues severe, with but little diminution of snow. A vast quantity of cattle have perished, and I am satisfied that I am fully justified in estimating the general loss of stock throughout the different valleys at two-thirds, which is less than some estimate it.

The scarcity of forage and low condition of the stock, will interfere materially with starting the contemplated Express between Sacramento (Cal) and the Missouri river, which was to have been put into operation during the spring, under the patronage and support of Gov. Young and the principal men in the territory.

The Delegates chosen in the several precincts last month, are to assemble in convention in this city, on the 16th inst, to adopt measures towards applying for admission into the Union as an independent State. This question will offer a nut for our wiseres in Congress to crack, and let off a vast quantity of gas, while doubt.

The religious portion will have an opportunity of exhibiting their horror of the "peculiar institution" legalized in Utah, which rabid Abolitionists display in reference to our Southern "peculiar institution." As a State right man of the Calhoun school, I consider that the people of a State or territory have a right to adopt as many "peculiar institutions" as they choose, provided they do not conflict with the constitution of the United States. I maintain that a citizen of Utah has far more legal right to take and support a score of wives and four score of children, than the citizen of other States and Territories have in pursuing the "peculiar practice" which thousands are addicted to; for public opinion and law justify the one, while they are, or profess to be, opposed to the other.

The scarcity of provisions and consequent suffering which prevails, will have a tendency to drive off several in the spring who are "lacking in faith," if they can obtain provisions and cattle sufficient to take them to the States or California. We have had no mail from the East since the receipt of the October mail.

VOYAGER.

NEW YORK CITY INTER-DICTED.

The number of robberies and street assaults in the city of New York is so greatly on the increase, and the police force are so absolutely unable to protect the citizen and visitor against the club and the knife, and these evils are so alarming that it has been thought advisable to warn all people of the dangers they incur by a visit to that city. It is in a measure incumbent on all the journals out of that city to send reports of the most heinous crimes, thieves, assassins, murderers, robbers, politicians and vile masterly and conclusive hints of every degree, who hang about and infest all its thoroughfares and places of resort, from grand and truthful Wall street down to the haunts of the lowest retainers of the Cus-mischievous theories of its opposition House, to warn the public, and stamped it with the seal of approval and Life is not safe there, daylight consternation. What more does a man from a temperance men want? It is a city where a man may be assassinated. It is a city where a man may be branded by the law as a hoppers.

lication, utterly unsafe for any worthy of incarceration in jails. The Legislature met at Fill-man to visit. No other city in the world permits crime to be committed with such impunity, or is so entirely regardless of the life and property of its citizens. Buffalo Express.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1856.

The committee on the Kansas election are digging out the most monstrous fraud ever perpetrated on the pretence of a legal election. Yet the indications are that no remedy will be applied.

The free State party in Kansas appear to be situated much as we were here five years ago, overborne by power and lawlessness, much of it under pretence of legal authority. They have the support of a powerful party in the northern States. Our support was in that undemocratic minority, ever just, which, finding earth too corrupt, has made its abiding place in heaven.

Everything indicates the purpose of the administration to embrace the cause of the adventurers in Central America, with the view to annexation. It is not impossible that the Cincinnati Convention may embrace the plan as a popular issue for the Presidential canvass.

We are glad to again see the Chicago Tribune among our exchanges. But we were most surprised to find in it a communication from Mackinac, speaking well of Beaver Island, and its inhabitants. We have transferred the article to our columns.

The bill appropriating one hundred thousand dollars for the improvement of the navigation of Saint Mary's River, has passed both houses. Its fate in the hands of the Pres. is yet in doubt.

The present Congress are making grants of public lands for railroad purposes. Michigan has a chance of coming in for a share. These grants will perhaps be popular, but the advantages of them will accrue exclusively to the benefit of speculators. With the abundance of money, railroads on paying routes can be constructed without such aid.

Hostilities seem to have broken out again in Kansas. We have no details.

Pres. Pierce has vetoed the bill making an appropriation for the improvement of the Saint Clair Flats.

The Pres. has sent to Congress an elaborate message, on the Central American affairs.

The naval force of the United States has been put in requisition to protect Americans in Central America.

We find in the Chicago Tribune, the first spring news from Utah, and that a merely anonymous letter. If this is reliable, two-thirds of the cattle are dead, and there has been great suffering among the people.

Speaking of the prohibitory liquor law, and of the decision of the Supreme Court, that it is Constitutional, the Jackson Girling well of the Mormons, is a rare sight.

Mr. Leslie must allow us to correct him in a portion of his letter. He has made the wharves and mills too few, and Mr. Strang's wives too many. And what distinguishes him from most public men is, that he has nobody's wife but his own.

There may be at present a quiet time, and delinquents had been appointed to present a State Constitution to Congress, asking admission into the Union as a State.

This law is strictly in force where public affairs are in the hands of the Mormons, and nowhere else in the State. Yet the party who forced it through the Legislature, under whip and spur, generally agree in denouncing us as outlaws. We suspect the law was made by hypocrites, not to be kept, but for Buncombe.

NEWS FROM THE STRAITS.
(Special Correspondence of the Daily Tribune.)
MACKINAC, April 28th '56.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—I am happy to be able to inform you that the Straits are entirely open and free from ice. To-day the weather is quite pleasant, and no appearance of snow in the woods. In fact, the only evidences of winter to be seen are a few cakes of ice in the shallow indentations of the shore, and a little field-ice opposite the fort. We have met considerable quantities of ice between the Great Manitow and the Beaver Island. In fact, it extended pretty much all the way often as far as the eye could see, but it was so thin and rotten as to offer but the very slightest impediment to our progress. The Superior will be the first vessel to make the passage of the Strait this spring, as well, I presume, as that of the Saint, so that I hope you will be prepared with the new hat to Capt. Jones by the time that he returns to Chicago.

We called yesterday at the Mormon settlement on Beaver Island, and had the pleasure of seeing the Prophet and High Priest, Strang, as well as several of the other dignitaries of the place. They gave the population of the place at 1,500, and state that it is rapidly increasing. The whole settlement, so far as we could see, has an aspect of thrift and neatness about it which shows that the community must be industrious. They have got three piers at the harbor, with several thousand cords of wood, got out for the purpose of supplying boats. They possess one grist mill and one saw mill, but no vessels.

They print a daily and a weekly paper, made up principally with doctrinal discussions in to various elements of the Mormon faith. In the paper, the doctrine of polygamy is not openly avowed, but only defended with vexillous mediocrity. We have heard it reported from a reliable source that Strang has got nine wives; a statement which, if true, would go far to prove that his practice is even more distinct and edification than his profession.

The agricultural capabilities of the Island are reported to be good, and the soil produces all the smaller cereals, as also all kinds of vegetables in the highest perfection.

Since touching at Mackinac, I have learned that the straits have been passable for the last six days. The lowest range of the thermometer, during the past winter here, was 26 degrees below zero—not so cold as we had it in Chicago. We were saluted with two guns on landing, and quite a volley.

turn out took place to see the "Superior." All honour to Chicago for sending the first vessel through the straits; it is a striking commentary on the enterprise of the citizens.

In haste, I am, &c.,
GEORGE LESLIE.

A letter from Mackinac, speaking well of the Mormons, is a rare sight.

Mr. Leslie must allow us to correct him in a portion of his letter. He has made the wharves and mills too few, and Mr. Strang's wives too many. And what distinguishes him from most public men is, that he has nobody's wife but his own.

FROM SALT LAKE.

Mr. G. W. Hood, and six others, have just got in from Salt Lake, 47 days out. Mr. Hood states that there had been great suffering in Salt Lake during the winter, and shortness of crops, occasioned by the great outlaws and villains who are branded by the law as hoppers.

The Legislature met at Fillmore, 160 miles south of Salt Lake, had a quiet time, and delinquents had been appointed to present a State Constitution to Congress, asking admission into the Union as a State.

Mr. Babbitt, Secretary of the territory, and Judge Kinney Marie Antoinette, until last year, along with the miseries for different points of the world, are now on their way.

About ten thousand head of stock perished during the winter of the northern valleys.

A posse of men, under a Deputy U. S. Marshal, went out in February to take some prisoners among the Pah Uta Indians, who, it is charged, murdered and killed two—one of the Indians cut his throat after he was arrested. This tribe of Indians, in Cedar Valley, stole 150 head of stock. They were pursued into the mountains, 50 head of stock were captured—eight forms were killed, and also two or three Indians.

Business has been very dull on account of the scarcity and high price of provisions.

This party left Salt Lake with the mail party—seven in all—on the 11th of March. Had great difficulty in getting through the mountains, on account of the great quantity of snow. After passing the mountains, they had pleasant weather and a good trip. Saw a number of Sioux at Larancie, all peaceable. It was understood that peace would be made.—Kansas Herald, 8th.

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1856.

ORIGIN OF FASHIONS OF DRESS.

Fashions originate in Paris. Whatever style of dress the Queen wears, all the ladies of the court wear, and all other ladies imitate them. The other courts of Europe follow the fashions of Paris, and the ladies throughout the country imitate the court of their own country.

Gentlemen's fashions are transmitted in the same way. In dress, at least, the Emperor and Empress of France reign throughout Europe and America, and if not quite absolute, hold a most tyrannous sway.

The spouse of Louis Philip, already 70 years of age, when Victoria came to the throne of Great Britain, the young Queen could, but slightly influence fashions. Victoria, being hair-dressed, English and some American ladies adopted the practice of contracting the upper lip, so as to show the teeth. Victoria bonnets and kissesquicks came into fashion because Victoria crumpled hers in kissing Prince Albert, during a morning stroll. Ladies even put a white pocket handkerchief upon their necks, because once morning the Queen protected her throat from a cold sea breeze with one.

In a similar manner French fashions are modified by the peculiarities of different courts, in various places; but throughout Europe and America French fashions, however modified, prevail.

But very slight circumstances serve to change and modify them. In the south of Europe, well formed feet and small round ankles are common, almost universal. Nothing can prevent the general use of short dresses. Queen Victoria has large ankles, and is almost bow-legged. The dress must touch the carpet, and no lady is admitted to court who does not follow the fashion.

What she and they will do when the popular Empress and all the French ladies lengthen their dresses a quarter yard at the top, and shorten them a half at the bottom, is doubtful. It is one of the mortifications which the beautiful and wayward Empress is very likely to subject her to.

Every body has heard of hoops as an article of female wardrobe, but few living persons in this country have ever seen them. They are always put on friend, who has just arrived from the Queens of France in cer-Detroit, that there is one Akenside, alias Atkyn, et cetera, who is blowing around Detroit about the Mormons, and saying that there is one J. M. Wait engaged in horse stealing and other thefts. Now I will give you a history of this Akenside, &c. He came to our Island last fall, and professed he was a Mormon, and came among us without one dime in his pocket; I took him to my house and fed him, and he proposed to me to get him an apparatus of a Daguerrean Artist, professing to know the business. I sent by Capt. Alexander, of the propeller Iowa, to Buffalo, and purchased one for him, and he agreed to pay me for the apparatus as fast as he took pictures; until he paid for it. He has only paid me six dollars; and I also found him material for furnishing the room. But instead of returning the apparatus to me, the legal owner, he went and sold it to Messrs. Johnson and McCulloch, and ran away from the Island.

Queen Victoria endeavoured to inaugurate the same fashion under similar circumstances, but could only introduce quilts, cords and bustles. Such is the tyranny of fashion. The wants of one hundred and they follow at the sacrifice of convenience, health, and sometimes life.

The severe cold weather of last winter killed the leaves on trees on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. Peach trees are killed the Island.

Now I warn all respectable men against him, as he is an impostor, and lives on the public.

He drinks Alcohol when he can't raise the wind, for the Capt. of the Young America said he drank all the alcohol they had in the can on the boat, so they had not enough for their lamps.

J. M. WAIT.

Long Island Sound was frozen last winter, so as to interrupt navigation fifty days.

The Iowa went down this morning in tow of the Edith and the half cent for the dollars he San. She had broke her shaft, and is making. Such a policy is very much like the farmer who sows three pecks of seed

FRIDAY, MAY 30, 1856.

Mr. Hull, clerk of the steamer where he ought to have sown five; Michigan, says the Cleveland Herald, reports disturbances among the Mormons at Beaver Island. Strang of grain.

Every body has heard of the fine proverb of penny wise and pound foolish; but some of the fine proverbs of the world are, "They are peaching," and "make sure to be a capital investment." There are people in the world who are so short sighted enough to believe their interests can be best promoted by peaching and clinging to a cent sap through their runaways, we have heard of a "peaching" in Mackinac, other things being equal, that he who is the most liberal is the most successful in business. It seems we do not mean it to be a Mormon, who was dropped from a boat here last year, and professed in his expatriation, but obliged to stay through the winter that he should show his customers, for want of money to leave if he is a trader, or those with whom he may be doing any kind of business, that in all his transactions as well as social relations, he acknowledges the everlasting fact that there can be no permanent prosperity in a community where thought they were a successful benefits are not reciprocal.

and returned, because they were just as tenacious of their religion as any body else." If Mr. Hull, Clerk of the Michigan, has lent himself to be the bearer of such tales, he cannot stoop to meanness. Any thing or to react upon the soul and mean would be up to his level, leave the stain of corruption there. The Michigan is a trading boat, and its transactions at this place frequently amount to over $1,000 a trip. No guard is ever set at night or day when she lies here, that spot and inflames it, till by and no complaint has ever been made of any trespass or their ruin the whole soil. Be careful committed on board. We submit to Oliver Newbury, Esq., proprietor and supercargo of the Michigan, that he habitually leaves his property on board at Beaver Island, as he does at no other point on route from Buffalo to Green Bay.

VULGAR WORDS.

There is as much connection between the words and the thoughts, as there is between the thoughts and the words; the latter are not only the expression of the former, but they have power to react upon the soul and leave the stain of corruption there.

A young man who allows himself to use profane or vulgar words has not only shown that there is a foul spot on his mind, but by the utterance of that word he extends that spot and inflames it, till by indulgence it will soon pollute and ruin the whole soil. Be careful of your words as well as your thoughts. If you can control the tongue that no improper words be pronounced by it, you will soon save it from corruption. You extinguish the fire by smothering it, or prevent bad thoughts bursting out in language. Never utter a word anywhere, which you would be ashamed to speak in the presence of the most religious man. Try this practice a little, and you will soon have command of War is really broke out in Kansas, and the free State men are giving way.

SAINT JAMES, May 28, '56.

The liars are not all dead yet, nor fools, nor knaves nor scoundrels. I understand from a friend, who has just arrived from that there is one Akenside, alias Atkyn, et cetera, who is blowing around Detroit about the Mormons, and saying that there is one J. M. Wait engaged in horse stealing and other thefts. Now I will give you a history of this Akenside, &c. He came to our Island last fall, and professed he was a Mormon, and came among us without one dime in his pocket; I took him to my house and fed him, and he proposed to me to get him an apparatus of a Daguerrean Artist, professing to know the business. I sent by Capt. Alexander, of the propeller Iowa, to Buffalo, and purchased one for him, and he agreed to pay me for the apparatus as fast as he took pictures; until he paid for it. He has only paid me six dollars; and I also found him material for furnishing the room. But instead of returning the apparatus to me, the legal owner, he went and sold it to Messrs. Johnson and McCulloch, and ran away from the Island.

Now I warn all respectable men against him, as he is an impostor, and lives on the public.

He drinks Alcohol when he can't raise the wind, for the Capt. of the Young America said he drank all the alcohol they had in the can on the boat, so they had not enough for their lamps.

J. M. WAIT.

Long Island Sound was frozen last winter, so as to interrupt navigation fifty days.

The Iowa went down this morning in tow of the Edith and the half cent for the dollars he San. She had broke her shaft, and is making. Such a policy is very much like the farmer who sows three pecks of seed

Mr. Hull, clerk of the steamer where he ought to have sown five; Michigan, says the Cleveland Herald, reports disturbances among the Mormons at Beaver Island. Strang of grain.

VULGAR WORDS.

There is as much connection between the words and the thoughts, as there is between the thoughts and the words; the latter are not only the expression of the former, but they have power to react upon the soul and leave the stain of corruption there.

A young man who allows himself to use profane or vulgar words has not only shown that there is a foul spot on his mind, but by the utterance of that word he extends that spot and inflames it, till by indulgence it will soon pollute and ruin the whole soil. Be careful of your words as well as your thoughts. If you can control the tongue that no improper words be pronounced by it, you will soon save it from corruption. You extinguish the fire by smothering it, or prevent bad thoughts bursting out in language. Never utter a word anywhere, which you would be ashamed to speak in the presence of the most religious man. Try this practice a little, and you will soon have command of War is really broke out in Kansas, and the free State men are giving way.

SAINT JAMES, May 28, '56.

The liars are not all dead yet, nor fools, nor knaves nor scoundrels. I understand from a friend, who has just arrived from that we are not to expect peace or protection in the midst of the people who have done us this injury. Both by the commandment of God and the necessity of our situation, we are seeking a home in a land where religious sects and religious parties are far removed from us, a land uninhabited.

We have not been suffered to live with other men. Shall we not be permitted to live alone? God made the earth for all men. Of the vast all he has given us a few little islands. They are a few little islands. They are a few little islands. They are a few little islands.

For nine years our communities have dwelt here in peace among themselves. The few small schisms which have arisen, have yielded to the ordinary course of discipline, and the wrong doers have either amended or departed from among us, doing us very little injury, except as they were abetted by public officers, religious boobies, the newspaper press, and bands of lawless men. Yet we are pursued from day to day with continual threatenings. An effort is continually made to convince us that we are to have no rest forever.

Three times have we fled before our persecutors, because we would not repeat injuries by force. We understand by the word of God that it is our duty to flee no further. We do not learn from the divine writings that it is our duty never to resist evil deeds. The time has come when forbearance is no longer a virtue.

While men around us have for years threatened us with fire and blood, and we only asked legal justice, they have been continually commended for their forbearance, and we continually menaced with invasions, expatriation and death.

We have ceased to take to ourselves any trouble about these matters. We have known for years what our persecutors seem so anxious to impress upon us, that when the public vengeance is awakened up the law will not protect us; and that among an angry people innocence is no shield.

We do not expect Governor or President to protect us against mobs. We live in the continual assurance that any one of us might be murdered in a night, and we are not a magistrate could be induced to issue process against the murderer.

Yet we trust in God. We walk in conscious security. We laugh in bitter scorn at all threats in any way. He will these threats. And we tell ourselves he is highly gratified to these wolf hounds, marshal know that his friends here were your myrmidons, and send them considerably excited at his message, to make a spoil of beautiful disappearances and made to and booty, as soon as you a most commendable effort.

We will neither purchase nor temporary peace and future calamities by dishonourable trafficking with political jugglers, nor will we yield our homes to enemies. If we live, here willing tribute to his memory which we live. If we die, here will only await the discovery of our bodies, and here shall our bones be buried, expecting in the resurrection of the just to possess the land forever, and dwell with the righteous during the lifetime of the Eternal.

God judge between us and all men.

INFORMATION WANTED. Edward Jones, a Welchman, up a "commotion." This do by birth, who speaks English in a very appropriate, and but indifferently, started from know of several smart men, who Syracuse, Meigs Co., Ohio, early anticipating it, would have been. They now sell at 60 cts, but are like to go up to 65 very early in the season.

April last, at Lafayette, Ind. The other Dr. has engaged a new car, and is certain it will be done, but the wrong train, since which his very sorry that the evil day is friends have heard nothing from so far off that he shall get no share of the spoils in the plunder.

His trunk came on with the rest of the company, and is supposed to contain his money, and a kindness; but strange, poor, it is thought that he may be at the end of his journey, and work somewhere in the vicinity of the flood must come, let it be now of Indianapolis, or at some other and not next year.

MARINE.

ARRIVED.
May 20, Steamer Michigan, Capt. Stewart, from Buffalo, N.Y., with passengers, Capt. Patterson, from Buffalo, N.Y., and Capt. Patterson, from Buffalo, N.Y.
May 21, Steamer Michigan, Capt. Stewart, from Buffalo, N.Y., with passengers, Capt. Patterson, from Buffalo, N.Y., and Capt. Patterson, from Buffalo, N.Y.

DEPARTED.
May 20, Steamer Michigan, Capt. Stewart, for Buffalo, N.Y., with passengers, Capt. Patterson, from Buffalo, N.Y., and Capt. Patterson, from Buffalo, N.Y.
May 21, Steamer Michigan, Capt. Stewart, for Buffalo, N.Y., with passengers, Capt. Patterson, from Buffalo, N.Y., and Capt. Patterson, from Buffalo, N.Y.

CONFERENCES.

The General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Saint James, commencing Sabbath June 2nd, at 10 o'clock, A.M. The same space with standing religious boobies, the newspaper press, and bands of lawless men. Yet we are pursued from day to day with continual threatenings. An effort is continually made to convince us that we are to have no rest forever.

COMMERCIAL.

REVIEW OF THE MARKET.
May 20th.
Flour—Flour has suddenly come down to $6.50 for best Michigan at retail.
Wheat—Wheat is dull. $1.25 is yet asked for the best quality, but finds no takers. Holders will be obliged to submit to a material reduction.
Corn—There is a good supply of corn for use, but scarcely any for sale. It rates at 75 cts. to $1.00.
Oats—Oats are worth 50 cts. per bushel. Oats in the bundle are worth 4 to 5 cts.
Beans—Beans are rather plenty, but find a ready sale at 75 cts.
Potatoes—Potatoes are rather scarce, at $2.00 to $2.50, and in request.
Pork—Pork sells at $18 per bbl. and 11 cts. per pound.
Butter—Nominally butter is worth 25 cts., but there is little for sale at any price, and some who are making small quantities for sale, choose to part with it at a loss.

THE LAST NEWS FROM DR. ATRIN.

It seems the man who disappeared so mysteriously from the Lansing House, on Wednesday morning last, has turned up in Jackson. We do not learn by what particular process he slid down the mountain, and so far as we have been able to make personal observations, an improvement in the quality. Five wharves will be in the wood trade at Beaver and we presume two at North Manitowish and one at South.

"AMERICAN SHILL" RULE "AMERICA."

Was issued about the 15th of March, and is the most accurate and complete of the kind ever published. It is printed, folded and ready for the press. It is the "Law of the Land" being a complete and accurate translation of the Law of the Land, with numerous and valuable additions. It is printed, folded and ready for the press. It is the "Law of the Land" being a complete and accurate translation of the Law of the Land, with numerous and valuable additions.

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

Agents wanted in every county in the United States to sell by subscription "BROTHER JASON, THE CIRCE, OR, 10 YEARS A MYSTERY." This is a great work abounds in striking, amusing, and instructive pictures of times, and is common to every one that looks at it. It is a work of the highest order, and is a work of the highest order, and is a work of the highest order.

OLD POINT WHARF.

The proprietors will be prepared to do a small business in the best quality of steam boat work at this popular landing place. During the coming season of navigation, we have fifty feet water at the front of the wharf, and therefore are free from the annoyance of getting around.

FOR THE MORMON ISLANDS.

The Lady is fitted up in excellent style for the accommodation of passengers, and is under the charge of her experienced and gentle captain, Commander, Capt. Roseman, prepared to do the passenger and freighting business to and from the Islands in the most satisfactory manner.

STEAMBOAT WOOD.

R. G. Wright, at Galilee, will be prepared to open trade in the spring with 3,000 cord of best white wood, beech and maple, on hand and on order, and facilities of bringing forward at the rate of 30 cords per day during the season.

MILWAUKEE SHIP YARD.

Is now ready to contract and build for steam and propellers, vessels or other boats of any size or class desired. Also to erect or repair vessels not over 100 feet long.

$150 per cord, and in demand. Cows $38 per head, and not likely to fall.

WAGES OF LABORERS.—Labour is greatly in demand, and we have ever seen it. Wages are continually advanced, but with the advance comes no relief. It is next to impossible to hire men at any price. Possibly a half dozen persons may be seen lounging around complaining of want of employ.

FISHING.—The season is well advanced, and the fish are running. The fish are running. The fish are running. The fish are running.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO WOODMEN.—Any quantity of wood, which can be brought forward, can be put on the lot at 125 cts. per cord, and will be paid for the moment the wood is sold. Subscribers landing at the Point will pass their effects free of charge.

TO CHOPPERS.—I wish to employ five or six hands for the season to chop green pine and cedar wood at Old Point and near my house, at fifty cents per cord. JAMES J. STRANG, Saint James, May 27, 1856. 246.

LOST YAWLS.—I have a vessel's yawl, which came ashore on Garden Island, now in need of repair, which the owner can use by paying for saving it, and for this notice.

GOOL LOOKS BY MAIL.—In order to accommodate "The People," residing in all parts of the United States, the undersigned publishers will forward by return of the first mail, any book named in the following list. The postage will be prepaid by them, at the New York office. By this arrangement of pre-paying postage, the purchaser, fifty per cent will be saved to the purchaser. All letters containing orders should be post-paid, and directed as follows: FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, New York.

DEFENCE OF PHRENOLOGY.—Containing an Essay on the nature and value of phrenological evidences, also an able vindication of phrenology. By Boardman, Price 87 cents.

DOMESTIC LIFE.—Thoughts on its concord and discord, with valuable hints and suggestions. By N. S. Sears. Price 16 cents.

EDUCATION.—An Elementary principle, founded on the nature of man. By J. G. Spurzheim, with an appendix, and containing a description of the Temperaments, and an analysis of the phrenological faculties. Price 87 cents. We regard this volume as one of the most important that has been offered to the public for many years. (Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.)

Lectures on Phrenology.—By George Combe, with notes, an Essay on the phrenological mode of investigation, an historical sketch, by Dr. Boardman. Illustrated. Price 21 cents.

Marriage, its History and Philosophy.—A phrenological and physiological exposition of the functions and qualifications necessary for happy marriages. Illustrated. Price 75 cents.

Memory and Intellectual Improvement.—Applied to the selection of congenial companions for life; including directions to the married for living together affectionately and happily. Price 30 cents.

Phrenology proved, illustrated and applied, accompanied by a chart, embracing an analysis of the primary mental powers in their various degrees of development, the phenomena produced by their combined activity, and the location of the phrenological organs; together with a view of the moral theological bearing of the science. Price $1.25.

Woman in all Ages and Nations: an authentic history, from the earliest ages. Paper, 62 cents; muslin, 87 cents.

Hydrophobic Family Physician: a ready prescriber and hygienic adviser, with reference to the nature, causes, prevention and treatment of diseases, accidents and anomalies of every kind with a glossary, table of contents, and index; illustrated with three hundred engravings. By Joel Shaw, M.D., one large volume of 820 pages, substantially bound. Price, pre-paid by mail, $2.50.

Hydrophobic Encyclopedia: a system of hydrophobic and hygienic containing on lines of anatomy, physiology of the human body, hygienic agencies, and the preservation of health, and hydrophobic cookery; theory and practice of water-treatment; special pathology, and hydrotherapeutics, including the nature, cause, symptoms, and treatment of all known diseases; application of hydrophobic to midwifery and nursing, designed as a guide to families and students, and a text-book for physicians. By Dr. T. Trail, M.D. Illustrated with upwards of three hundred engravings, and colored plates; substantially bound. Price, pre-paid by mail, $3.00. This is the most comprehensive and popular work yet published on the subject of hydrophobic. Of all the publications which have attained such a wide popularity, as issued by Fowler & Wells, perhaps none are more adapted to general utility than this rich, comprehensive, and well arranged Encyclopedia.

Practice of Water-cure.—Containing a detailed account of the various processes used in the water-treatment, etc. Price, 30 cents.

Philosophy of Water-cure: A Development of the true principles of health and longevity. By Habington. Price, 20 cents.

New Hydrophobic Cook Book. By Dr. T. Trail, M.D.; a system of cookery on hydrophobic principles, containing an exposition of the true relation of all alimentary substances to health, with receipts for preparing all appropriate dishes for hydrophobic establishments, vegetarian, boarding houses, private families, &c., &c. It is the cook's complete guide for all who "want to live." Paper, 62 cents; muslin, 87 cents.

Science of Swimming. With instructions to learners; illustrated; 15 cents.

Water Cure in America. Over three hundred cases of various diseases treated with water; with cases of domestic practice. Price, $1.25.

Water Cure applied to every known Disease: a new theory; a complete demonstration of the hydrophobic system of curing diseases; showing also the fallacy of the allopathic method; and its utility to effect a permanent cure. With appendix containing the Hydrophobic diet, and rules for bathing. Price 87 cents.

Water Cure Manual: a popular work, embracing descriptions of the various modes of bathing, hygienic and curative diet of air, exercise, clothing, occupation, diet water-drinking, etc., together with descriptions of diseases and the hydrophobic remedies. By Dr. Shaw. Price 87 cents.

Water Cure Almanac. Illustrated, 6 cents.

Combe's Physiology: applied to the preservation of health, and to the improvement of physical and mental education. With notes by O. S. Fowler. Price 87 cents.

Chronic Diseases: especially the nervous diseases of women. From the German. Price 30 cents.

Food and Diet: with observations on the diet in a given suit of disorders, and an account of the digestive organs; and an account of the dietaries of some of the principal Metropolitan and other establishments for the poor, lunatic, criminal, and sick, etc. By Pereira. Price $1.25.

Theory of Population: deduced from the general law of animal fertility. Introduced by Dr. Trail. Price 15 cents.

Editor of these works: is ordered and received by return of the first mail, postage paid by the publishers. Please send the enclosed and address all orders pre-paid, to the Fowlers & Wells, 308 Broadway, New York.

N. B.—Name your Post Office, County

APOLOGY FOR THE MORMONS. Missouri river, but continual col-son, of the Topographical En-and prepared for the issue; and ple on all precedent, and ridedenied redress. We have not The 6th day of April, 1830, lions took place, till finally gineers, who spent a year with our enemies gave way without down all law. It has done more, forgotten that there are tributhe Church of Jesus Christ offthey were banished from the large body of them in their bloodshed. It has produced legislation ac-nals in which causes partially Latter Day Saints were organ-State by authority of a mandate new mountain home, have dissi- In 1851 they succeeded in according to its wishes, in violation similar in kind, immeasura-ized at the town of Fayette, issued by Lillburn W. Boggs, pated all suspicion in the minds enlisting the United States of all constitutional securities; bly less in aggravation, are the State of New York, consist-acting Governour, distinctly com- of intelligent men that tly had government in a violent and not merely contrary to pre-sometimes examined, perhaps ing of only six members, two of manding that the Saints (in de-given any occasion for the harsh lawless crusade against us, incoed, but destructive of natu-occasionally righted. But whom, Joseph Smith and Oliver rison called Mormons) be ban-treatment which they re-ceived the course of which immenseal right.
Cowdery, were Elders; being lished from the State, or exter-at the hands of the people of the quantities of private property This unrecognized law, foundgainst us by the law now, and the only true and living Churchminated. We are perfectly a-State of Illinois. was seized, and taken from us; only in the will of the masses, at all times by the power of existing by the commandment were that this mandate of the The unequivocal testimo-y of numerous individuals were ar-has been enforced in destroyingthat law already referred to,
of God on earth. acting Governour was unauthor-Thos. Ford, Governour of Illinois, rested on charge of felonies houses, offices and valuable pa-which is above statute, prece-guided by the revelations of God, of the constitution of the Statewho was present most f the every manner, and carried,guished citizens of the country. If a period cannot be-put to have always sought to come out of Missouri. time at the scene of ac-on, is prejudged and foredoomed, to public buildings of various these wrongs, then there is from among unbelivers, and be But the Legislature of that that their character and conduct distant places for trial, in the kinds, printing presses and rail presented to the world the separate. Knowing that others State, in failing to impeach the were far better than these ar-courts of their enemies; the roads owned by wealthy compa-melancholy spectacle of the were offended with their religion, Governour; and by appropria-rayed against them. United States military and na-nies, churches and convents of greatest republic on earth, a they endeavoured to avoid giving the money to pay the ex- Nevertheless this persecu-tion of nearly all the men, country, and to overthrow con- christian nation, acknowledging ing offence by removing from pence of executing his order, his was carried on until our fellow- tracts which had stood the vi-nation on whose righteousness among them, keeping the com- affirmed and adopted the act as servants, the prophets, Joseph- cessitudes of two hundred years, half the earth rest the hopes mandment, "Come out from the crime of the State. In ac-and Hyrum Smith, we mar- the ordeal of civil war and na- of man, confessing that there among them; that ye be not par-complishing this expulsion ten-tured; the houses of hundreds- tional revolution, though defend- is a power above the law, rid-takers of their sins, and receive- thousand persons, men, women Saints burned down before their- ing down the constitution, which stalks abroad to plun-not of their plagues." and children, were plundered of eyes; the entire community- der and banish the citizens, Almost immediately after the their possessions, exiled from amounting to 25,000 banished- and none to rebuke; murders organization of the Church, the their homes, and driven in des-from that section of the State. the unoffending innocent, and Saints commenced assembling at tition, hunger and want, in and four millions of dollar worth- none to say, "why do ye so?"
Kirtland, Ohio, for a temporary mid winter, to a distant land, of property sacrificed. After the banishment of the which sometimes its deeds of rendezvous; but at the same time passing much of the way in the w of he accused were acquitted, violence, even in the eyes of a few went up to Missouri, to lo- midst of hostile foes, who not Saints from Illinois, a w of he accused were acquitted, violence, even in the eyes of cate a permanent residence, and only refused them shelter and them came into Michigan, and- beaten, every one recovered, religious men, by blackening selected the site of Independ- commenced settlements a the- Only a small portion of the- the fame of the glorious dead, ence, Jackson county, as their future home, and commenced a- property which had been taken- with the name of crimes which settlement there. Many were separated from uninhabited, but occasionally on- from us was ever restored; in their life time it dared not their families and incarcerated by roving border s, en- but the justice of our cause- attempt to prove, even in its Agreeable to a commandment in prison, whence, after long de- gazed it- fishing and selling- own tribunals. The administrators of the which God gave them, they pur- tention, they escaped, only by quor to the Indians, in violation- chased large quantities of lands paying large sums of money to of law; and in criminal courses- government have been appeal-States, and paid the full price- yers, as the price of their en- The attempt to build to Per- ed to in vain. Unless these therefor to the officers of the largement. Besides a feeble few, nament and populous communi- tions are redressed, they United States. Upon these who, after learning that their ties in the midst of these valu- lands they made extensive set- persecutors were without com- ble lake fisheries, especially at- must rest on the nation fore-tlements, continually showing passion, were slain while defend Beaver Island, where there is an- er, and bring down the wrath themselves the most industrious ing their wives, their children excellent harbour, and every fa- of God on those who have peaceable and law-abiding cit- and their friends; eighteen per- cently for an extensive and pros- done, and those who have perizens of that section of the com- missioned in persons commerce, excited the- mitted them. If you fear not try. the worship of God, were mur- jealousy of those who at Mack- God, how will you answer to
At the time of which we speak dered unresisting, and in cold- ing had for a long time monop- mankind and to posterity, for no one among them was as- blood, in the early part of these colized the entire Indian and fish- such a desecration of republicused of any violation of the persecutions; one of them a mere ing trade. The wretched men of a bor- canism, in a christian country?
law, or of a want of attachment- child, who died mixing together- ders, who had sought a home- For these wrongs we do not to the constitution and govern- the words of his prayer to God- for these acts we pursued many- ask a grant of lands. We shall ment of the United States, or and his supplication for mercy beyond the haunts of "civiliza- never sell the lands of our the State of Missouri. from his murderers; another, an- tion, that they might indulge in- brethren and ourselves, the in-Notwithstanding these facts, old man, bowed down with suf- unrestrained debauchery and en- heritance of the martyred and their legal rights, a numer- fering and sorrow, scarred with- joy impunity in crime, could only- of their children, for new ous meeting of citizens, of Mis- the wounds he had received fifty- regard settlers who sought good- grants of which we are equalsouri was held at Independence, seven years before in defence of- order and legal government as- ly liable to be deprived by which decreed the expulsion of American liberty and American- invaders and enemies. They ear- the separation of our enemies from the Saints from that part of the independence; all yielding up- ly exhibited a hostile disposi- test against this, nearly univer-State. This meeting issued a their lives for the name of Jesus, and a determination to prevent- sal principle of assuming that we manifesto to the public, giving and the witness of the gospe- the establishment of legal gov- Missouri and Illinois four mil-to the world the reasons for ban- Others, at different times, shared ernment. lion and Illinois four mil-ishing from their neighbourhood the same fate; how many, we- undisturbed occupancy of a are guilty of great crimes, as ina numerous class of citizens; the know not- territory sufficient for our use ex- tensive for denoting us, the men- and lands purchased with the entire church of the Latter Day- Subsequently the Saints set- at the next session of the Leg- in our local rights. But, what- skill and industry of our faith-Saints. tled in great numbers in the- islate acts were passed, for we examine the evidence of the- ren the Saints, which they are in giving these reasons they State of Illinois, and built up- establishing the necessary ma- truth of these assumptions, they not permitted to occupy.
stated that our religious senti- besides many villages, the city- nicipal authorities in that ter- Courts, State Legislatures, and ments and domestic habits were of Nauvoo, at one time the most- ritory, organizing town and- Joseph, the martyred proph- State Legislatures are deaf to us, incongruous with theirs, and that populous city in the State. At- rity, government, and a reg- et, whose blood stain on the bl When we speak, they cannot it was necessary for their happi- their first settlement they were- county government, and a reg- in Carthage are as indelible as here. When we ask justice, ness that our brethren should kindly received; but after build- lar judiciary. Irritated at this, and suffer- force of Jesus on the cross, but their faces are turned from us, leave; and as the grievances of ing up flourishing towns, becom- ing a great loss of trade by our- been arrested thirty-five times True, when they do speak, their which they complained were not ing numerous as a religious peo- ing grounds, whose entire in- growing prosperity, the people on criminal charges. Thirty-five is for us. But it comes af-recognized by the laws, and the pie, and strong in their political- some was derived through crim- Mackinac set our foot an- times he has been tried in the the deed is done, or it is so Saints had not violated any ex- influence, religious prejudice, per- inal means, joined by most of Mackinac for the avow- counts of his enemies, many faintly heard that the lawless-do sisting law whereby they were lited interests and commercial- the merchants at Mackinac, wheed purpose of resisting all le- days at the bar of men, whom they think it earnest. The forms subject to regular prosecution in rivalry combined together to de- view most seriously alarmed at al government in the county- advocated his murder. And of law hold us as victims, and the courts, therefore they would stroy them. the growing up of a commercial- at Emmet, a purpose not- thirty-eight times, in such courts, the power that is above law take redress into their own. On this occasion our persec- cial at Saint James, engaged cealed, but declared in the- at the bar of such men, has- he over whelm us. Thus have two hands, and compel them to leave- sons sought to justify, their vic- in the undertaking; and enlisted resolutions, of their public- been acquitted.
country, peaceably if they lence by accusing the Saints of- the officers and men on nearly measures, and published in the- Our prophets died in the hands could, forcibly if they must." enormous crimes, and the most- all the boats and vessels in the- the newspapers. A conflict ensued in- which men in nearly every State in the one act of public indignation
This decree was carried out in- tending corruptions. That- upper lake trade, by means of- A conflict ensued in- which men in nearly every State in the one act of public indignation 1833 by the expulsion of the these accusations were utterly- the fact that with courts, jurors- Every manner of false tale- was wounded, and several thousand souri. the fact that with courts, jurors- no matter by what falsehood orig- but the invasion failed, and- dollars of property destroyed,
*They then settled in various and prosecuting officers constant- nated, was circulated through- the invaders fled as the wick- no matter by what falsehood orig- but the invasion failed, and- dollars of property destroyed, counties on the north side of the- among our persecutors, few of- the Saints were ever prosecuted- By such means, in a short in this invasion we were duly in- time the mass of the public dictated, but by the connivance
*The western Monitor, of 24 August, 1833, contains this manifesto. We extract from it the following: "The evil is one that on original charges, and very few indeed ever convicted. That the best informed and most intelligent men of the na- tion are fully aware of their en- government of the country will be in their hands; when the justice, and the courts, that a territorial government judges will be Mormons, or persons wishing to court their favour from motives of base ambition. We do hereby most solemnly declare: "That no Mormon shall in future move and settle in this country. "That those now here, who shall give definite pledges of their intention, within a reasonable time from the date of this country, shall be allowed to remain, unmolested, until they have submitted in self to the property, and cases, their business, without any material service. "That the editor of the Star has committed himself to close his office, and discontinue the business of printing in this country, and that all other stores and shops belonging to the sect, their owners must in every case strictly comply with the terms of the foregoing article of this declaration; and upon failure, prompt and efficient measures will be taken to close the same. "That the Mormon leaders here, are required to use their influence in preventing any further emigration of their desert brethren to this country, and to counsel and advise their brethren here to comply with the above requisitions. "That those who fail to comply with these requisitions, be referred to those of their brethren who have the care of all their lands, and of unknown tombs, to inform them of the lot that awaits them. After adopting this manifesto, a committee was sent to exact a pledge of compliance from the Mormons and from their leaders, and it was unanimously resolved, that the Star printing office be razed to the ground, and the type and press destroyed, which was immediately done."

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. VI.—NO. 7.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1856.

WHOLE NO. 90.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

LAKE MICHIGAN, BY

COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS.—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion.

A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time, will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation, in winter, the ISLANDER will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

1833 by the expulsion of these accursed

Saints from Jackson Co., Mis-unfounded is clearly shown by the fact that with courts, jurors the merchants at Mackinac, who establishing the necessary mu-

They then settled in various and prosecuting officers constant were most seriously alarmed at nicipal authorities in that ter-counties on the north side of the and assiduously selected from the growing up of a commercial ritory, organizing town and from equal wrongs? We pro-

Missouri river, but continual col-among our persecutors, few of rived at Saint James, engaged county government, and a reg-lisions took place, till finally the Saints were ever prosecuted in the undertaking; and enlisted ular judiciary.

they were banished from the on criminal charges, and very the officers and men on nearly Irritated at this, and suffer-

State by authority of a mandate few indeed ever convicted. all the boats and vessels in the ing a great loss of trade by our issued by Lillburn W. Boggs. That the best informed and upper lake trade, by means of growing prosperity, the people acting Governor, distinctly com-most intelligent men of the na-ther acquaintance with them. of Mackinac set on foot an

A manding that the Saints (in de-tion are fully aware of their en-Every manner of false tale was armed invasion, for the ayowrisation called Mormons) be ban-tire innocence, is shown in the thus continually put afloat, and ed purpose of resisting all le-

ished from the State, or exter-fact that a territorial government no matter by what falsehood orig-al government in the county minated. We are perfectly a-has been organized under an actuated, was circulated through of Emmet, a purpose not con-ware that this mandate of the of Congress, possessing as full respect-able newspapers, on what cealed, but declared in the et, acting Governor was unauthor-powers as any other territorial was taken for good authority. resolutions of their publick

ized by the law, and in violation government can, organized un- By such means, in a short meetings, and published in the

of the constitution of the State der the jurisdiction of the Uni-time the mass of the publick newspapers.

of Missouri. ted States; giving its entire ex- were persuaded that the Saints

But the Legislature of that ex-utive and legislative power toat Beaver Island were the off-

The 6th day of April, 1830, State, in failing to impeach the same people then exiled; scourings of all things, and the Church of Jesus Christ of Governour, and by appropria-and the men among them who the dregs of the inhabitants of Latter Day Saints was organ-tion the money to pay the ex-exercised most influence and con-the earth.

ized at the town of Fayette, in pence of executing his order, hastrol in their affairs, and who, if Under these circumstances, the State of New York, consist-affirmed and adopted the act as they were criminal were most with no means of becoming ing of only six members, two of the crime of the State. In ac-guilty, have received the offices generally known to the pub-whom, Joseph Smith and Oliver-complishing this expulsion ten of Governour, Marshal and Sec-lick, except through the rep-

Cowdery, were Elders; being thousand persons, men, women retary of a Territory, as well as resentations of those thorough-

the only true and living Church-and children, were plundered of numerous minor appointments ly enlisted against us, in 1830, existing by the commandment their possessions, exiled from under the United States govern- extensive preparations were of God on earth. their homes, and driven in des-ment, under both Whig and made throughout the fishing

The members of this Church, titution, hunger and want, in Democratiek administrations. region for an armed assault up-guided by the revelations of God, mid winter, to a distant land. The very high character giv- us, by a force more than have always sought to come out passing much of the way in then them by Senator Douglass, four times as numerous as we

from among unbelievers, and be midst of hostile foes, who not who presided over the criminal could furnish for defence. The separate. Knowing that others only refused them shelter and courts of the Mormon District of Saints were thoroughly school-were offended with their religion, food, but kept them in continual Illinois, during the period of in the practice of nonresistthey endeavoured to avoid giv-danger. their sojourn there; by Col. Kane- ance, and were unarmed.

ing offence by removing from Many were separated from of the United States army, who But by the prophecies and among them, keeping the com-their families and incarcerated witnessed their expulsion; and Emmet, legislating its officers mandment, "Come out from in prison, whence, after long de-Captains Stansbury and Gunn- commandsments, it appeared among them, that ye be not par-tention, they escaped only byson, of the Topographical En- that having three times fled takers of their sins, and receive- paying large sums of money, to engineers, who spent a year with judiciary to the new county not of their plagues." prisonkeepers, judges and law-a large body of them in their it of Manitue, indicated a settled

Almost immediately after the yers, as the price of their en-new mountain home, have dissi- stand now our duty to with-organization of the Church, the largement. Besides a feeble few, pated all suspicion in the minds- determination to deny us legal

Saints commenced assembling at who, after learning that their of intelligent men that they had- protection, and secure from

Kirtland, Ohio, for a temporary persecutors were without com-given any occasion for the harsh- punishment those who had rendezvous; but at the same time passion, were slain while defend-treatment which they received- committed crimes against us.

a few went up to Missouri, to lo- ing their wives, their children at the hands of the people of the- For all these wrongs the laws selected the site of Independ- sons, unarmed, and engaged in The unequal testimony of- and institutions of the country ence, Jackson county, as their the worship of God, were mur-Thos. Ford, Governour of Illinois- offer us no redress. It is vain to ance home, and commenced a derved unresisting, and in cold at the time of their expulsion- answer that such acts are contra-settlement there. blood, in the early part of these who was present most of the- ry to law, and that the courts

A ppealed to a commandment persecutions: one of them a mere time at the scene of action, is en-listing the United States in the land stronger than stat-which God gave them, they par-child, who died mixing together that their character and conduct- government in a violent and chased large quantities of lands the words of his prayer to God, were far better than those ar- utes—more potent than the of the government of the United- and his supplication for mercy rayed against them. the course of which immense

States, and paid the full price from his murderers; another, an Nevertheless this persecution- masses, however vicious and therefor to the officers of the old man, bowed down with suf-was carried on until our fellow- quantities of private property

United States. Upon these- fering and sorrow, scarred with servants, the prophets, Joseph numerous individuals were ar-hands they made extensive set- seven years before in defence of tyred; the houses of hundreds of and misdemeanour of almost tlements, continually showing- American liberty and American Saints burned down before their every manner, and carried, cording to its wishes, in violation themselves the most industrious- independence; all yielding up eyes; the entire community a- prejudged and foredoomed, to of all constitutional securities;

peaceable and law-abiding citi- their lives for the name of Jesus, mounting to 25,000 banished distant places for trial, in the and not merely contrary to pre-zens of that section of the coun- and the witness of the gospel from that section of the State, courts of their enemies; the cedent, but destructive of natu-

try. Others, at different times, shared and four millions of dollars worth United States military and nar- val force was put in requisition

At the time of which we speak no one among them was ac- know not. After the banishment of the- to awe our families in the abused of any violation of the law, or of a want of attachment- set-Saints from Illinois, a few of- offence of nearly all the men, ment of the United States, or the State of Missouri. ded in great numbers, in them came into Michigan, and while numerous armed bands

Notwithstanding these facts, and their legal rights, a num- commenced settlements on the of our persecutors were left to pers- of some of the most distip-

ous meeting of citizens of Mis- besides many villages, the city Islands of the Great Lakes, then- room undisturbed through our-guished citizens of the country

souri was held at Independence- of Nauvoo, at one time the most uninhabited, but occasionally oc- seatments, taking and de- public buildings of various which decreed the expulsion- ing numerous as a religious peo- still more reprehensible. Attemped by roving borderers, en- kinds, printing presses and rail-of the Saints from that part of the State. This meeting issued a- ple, and strong in their political The attempt to build up per- roads owned by wealthy com-

manifesto to the publick, giving- influence, religious prejudice, po- nant and populous communi- pany, churches and convents to the world the reasons for ban- rivalry combined together to de- ble lake fisheries, especially at- the most ancient and numerous ishing from their neighbourhood- Beaver Island, where there is an- destroyed what they pleased, li- and insulting and assaulting a numerous class of citizens; the- On this occasion our persec- excellent harbour, and every fac- ing what they would. From all these perils God entire church of the Latter Day- tors sought to justify their vio- city for an extensive and pro- delivered us. Every one of Saints. In giving these reasons they- lence by accusing the Saints of per- perous commerce, excited the- the accused were acquitted stated that our religious senti- enormous crimes, and the most jealousy of those who at Mack- Though numerous persons

ments and domestic habits were- inac had for a long time monop- olized the entire Indian and fish- were assaulted and cruelly incongruous with theirs, and that- ing trade. The wretched men of the bor- ders, who had sought a home- beaten, every one recovered it was necessary for their happi- beyond the haunts of civiliza- tion, that they might indulge in- Only a small portion of the ness that our brethren should- unrestrained debauchery and en- joy impunity in crime, could only- property which had been leave; and as the grievances of- ly exhibited a hostile disposition, and a determination to prevent- taken from us was ever restored which they complained were not- the establishment of legal gov- ernment. But the justice of our cause recognized by the laws, and the- As early as 1849 we were sub- jected to numerous injuries, for- was vindicated by the decision

Saints had not violated any ex- which it was impossible to ob- tain redress. Women were in- of the proper officers that we isting law whereby they were- sulted, and men assaulted with- impunity. At the same time a- were entitled to all of it, and subject to regular prosecution in- the establishment of legal gov- ernment. But the actual loss was by the out-the courts, therefore they would- As early as 1849 we were sub- jected to numerous injuries, for- right stealing of public offitake redress into their own- which it was impossible to ob- tain redress. Women were in- cers.

hands, and compel them to leave- sulted, and men assaulted with- impunity. At the same time a- While these acts were gothe country, peaceably if they- sulted, and men assaulted with- impunity. At the same time a- ing on, a few people from could, forcibly if they must.*- sulted, and men assaulted with- impunity. At the same time a- Mackinac, and a numerous

*The western Monitor, of 2d August 1833, contains this manifesto. We extract from it the following: "The evil is one that requires no one could have foreseen, and is therefore provided for by the laws; and the delays attendant on legislation would put the mis-of beyond remedy. "Requires no gift of prophecy to tell that the day is not far distant when the civil government of the country will be in the hands of the justities, and the county judges will be Mormons, or persons wishing to court their favour from motives of interest or ambition. "We do hereby most solemnly declare,—

This decree was carried out inastounding corruptions. That the grounds, whose entire in-for many years to come; and And if the sanctity of the an-

1833 by the expulsion of these accusations were utterly come was derived through crim-at the next session of the Leg-cient christian faith, and the Saints from Jackson Co., Mis-unfounded is clearly shown by nial means, joined by most of islatute acts were passed for greatness of your nation have the fact that with courts, jurors the merchants at Mackinac, who establishing the necessary mu- not protected them from these

They then settled in various and prosecuting officers constant were most seriously alarmed at nicipal authorities in that ter- aspersions, what shall protect us counties on the north side of the and assiduously selected from the growing up of a commercial ritory, organizing town and from equal wrongs? We pro-

Missouri river, but continual col-among our persecutors, few of rived at Saint James, engaged county government, and a reg- test against this nearly univer-

lisions took place, till finally the Saints were ever prosecuted in the undertaking; and enlisted ular judiciary. sal practice of assuming that we

they were banished from the on criminal charges, and very the officers and men on nearly Irritated at this, and suffer- are guilty of great crimes, as an

State by authority of a mandate few indeed ever convicted. all the boats and vessels in the ing a great loss of trade by our excuse for denying us the regu-

issued by Lillburn W. Boggs. That the best informed and upper lake trade, by means of growing prosperity, the people lar protection of the government acting Governor, distinctly com-most intelligent men of the na-ther acquaintance with them. of Mackinac set on foot an In our legal rights. But when

A manding that the Saints (in de-tion are fully aware of their en-Every manner of false tale was armed invasion, for the ayow- we examine the evidence of the risation called Mormons) be ban-tire innocence, is shown in the thus continually put afloat, and ed purpose of resisting all le- truth of these assumptions, they

ished from the State, or exter-fact that a territorial government no matter by what falsehood orig-al government in the county are most conclusively falsified.

minated. We are perfectly a-has been organized under an actuated, was circulated through of Emmet, a purpose not con- Joseph, the martyred proph-

ware that this mandate of the of Congress, possessing as full respect-able newspapers, on what cealed, but declared in the et, whose blood stains on the jail

acting Governor was unauthor-powers as any other territorial was taken for good authority. resolutions of their publick at Carthage are as indelible as

ized by the law, and in violation government can, organized un- By such means, in a short meetings, and published in the those of Jesus on the cross, has

of the constitution of the State der the jurisdiction of the Uni-time the mass of the publick newspapers. been arrested thirty-nine times of Missouri. ted States; giving its entire ex- were persuaded that the Saints on criminal charges. Thirty-nine

But the Legislature of that ex-utive and legislative power toat Beaver Island were the off- several of the Saints were times he has been tried in the

The 6th day of April, 1830, State, in failing to impeach the same people then exiled; scourings of all things, and wounded, and several thousand

the Church of Jesus Christ of Governour, and by appropria-and the men among them who the dregs of the inhabitants of dollars of property destroyed

Latter Day Saints was organ-tion the money to pay the ex-exercised most influence and con-the earth. but the invasion failed, and

ized at the town of Fayette, in pence of executing his order, hastrol in their affairs, and who, if Under these circumstances, the invaders fled as the wick-

the State of New York, consist-affirmed and adopted the act as they were criminal were most with no means of becoming ed often do, when no man pur-

ing of only six members, two of the crime of the State. In ac-guilty, have received the offices generally known to the pub- sued. The criminals engaged whom, Joseph Smith and Oliver-complishing this expulsion ten of Governour, Marshal and Sec- lick, except through the rep- in this invasion were duly in-

Cowdery, were Elders; being thousand persons, men, women retary of a Territory, as well as resentations of those thorough- dicted, but by the connivance

the only true and living Church-and children, were plundered of numerous minor appointments ly enlisted against us, in 1830, of officers and citizens they

existing by the commandment their possessions, exiled from under the United States govern- extensive preparations were were able to escape a trial of God on earth. their homes, and driven in des-ment, under both Whig and made throughout the fishing and have gone unpunished

The members of this Church, titution, hunger and want, in Democratiek administrations. region for an armed assault up- But their flight from this re-

guided by the revelations of God, mid winter, to a distant land. The very high character giv- us, by a force more than gion left us in the enjoyment have always sought to come out passing much of the way in then them by Senator Douglass, four times as numerous as we of peace and undisturbed or-

from among unbelievers, and be midst of hostile foes, who not who presided over the criminal could furnish for defence. The der.

separate. Knowing that others only refused them shelter and courts of the Mormon District of Saints were thoroughly school- But the action of the State were offended with their religion, food, but kept them in continual Illinois, during the period of in the practice of nonresist- Legislature, at its next session, they endeavoured to avoid giv-danger. their sojourn there; by Col. Kane- ance, and were unarmed. in cutting up the county of

ing offence by removing from Many were separated from of the United States army, who But by the prophecies and Emmet, legislating its officers among them, keeping the com-their families and incarcerated witnessed their expulsion; and commandsments, it appeared mandment, "Come out from in prison, whence, after long de-Captains Stansbury and Gunn- that having three times fled among them, that ye be not par-tention, they escaped only byson, of the Topographical En- judiciary to the new county takers of their sins, and receive- paying large sums of money, to engineers, who spent a year with it of Manitue, indicated a settled not of their plagues." prisonkeepers, judges and law-a large body of them in their stand now our duty to with-

Almost immediately after the yers, as the price of their en-new mountain home, have dissi- determination to deny us legal organization of the Church, the largement. Besides a feeble few, pated all suspicion in the minds- protection, and secure from

Saints commenced assembling at who, after learning that their of intelligent men that they had- punishment those who had Kirtland, Ohio, for a temporary persecutors were without com-given any occasion for the harsh- committed crimes against us.

rendezvous; but at the same time passion, were slain while defend-treatment which they received- For all these wrongs the laws

a few went up to Missouri, to lo- ing their wives, their children at the hands of the people of the- and institutions of the country selected the site of Independ- sons, unarmed, and engaged in The unequal testimony of- offer us no redress. It is vain to ence, Jackson county, as their the worship of God, were mur-Thos. Ford, Governour of Illinois- answer that such acts are contra-ance home, and commenced a derved unresisting, and in cold at the time of their expulsion- ry to law, and that the courts settlement there. blood, in the early part of these who was present most of the- are open to us. The Legislature

A ppealed to a commandment persecutions: one of them a mere time at the scene of action, is en-listing the United States in the land stronger than stat- has closed the courts against us;

which God gave them, they par-child, who died mixing together that their character and conduct- government in a violent and utes—more potent than the chased large quantities of lands the words of his prayer to God, were far better than those ar- the course of which immense of the government of the United- and his supplication for mercy rayed against them. quantities of private property

States, and paid the full price from his murderers; another, an Nevertheless this persecution- masses, however vicious and therefor to the officers of the old man, bowed down with suf-was carried on until our fellow- quantities of private property

United States. Upon these- fering and sorrow, scarred with servants, the prophets, Joseph numerous individuals were ar- produced, has been able to tram-hands they made extensive set- seven years before in defence of tyred; the houses of hundreds of and misdemeanour of almost It has produced legislation ac-

tlements, continually showing- American liberty and American Saints burned down before their every manner, and carried, cording to its wishes, in violation themselves the most industrious- independence; all yielding up eyes; the entire community a- prejudged and foredoomed, to of all constitutional securities;

peaceable and law-abiding citi- their lives for the name of Jesus, mounting to 25,000 banished distant places for trial, in the and not merely contrary to pre-

zens of that section of the coun- and the witness of the gospel from that section of the State, courts of their enemies; the cedent, but destructive of natu-

try. Others, at different times, shared and four millions of dollars worth United States military and nar- val force was put in requisition

At the time of which we speak no one among them was ac- know not. After the banishment of the- to awe our families in the abused of any violation of the law, or of a want of attachment- set-Saints from Illinois, a few of- offence of nearly all the men, ment of the United States, or the State of Missouri. ded in great numbers, in them came into Michigan, and while numerous armed bands

Notwithstanding these facts, and their legal rights, a num- commenced settlements on the of our persecutors were left to pers- of some of the most distip-

ous meeting of citizens of Mis- besides many villages, the city Islands of the Great Lakes, then- room undisturbed through our-guished citizens of the country

souri was held at Independence- of Nauvoo, at one time the most uninhabited, but occasionally oc- seatments, taking and de- public buildings of various which decreed the expulsion- ing numerous as a religious peo- still more reprehensible. Attemped by roving borderers, en- kinds, printing presses and rail-

of the Saints from that part of the State. This meeting issued a- ple, and strong in their political The attempt to build up per- roads owned by wealthy com-

manifesto to the publick, giving- influence, religious prejudice, po- nant and populous communi- pany, churches and convents

to the world the reasons for ban- rivalry combined together to de- ble lake fisheries, especially at- the most ancient and numerous ishing from their neighbourhood- Beaver Island, where there is an- destroyed what they pleased, li- and insulting and assaulting a numerous class of citizens; the- On this occasion our persec- excellent harbour, and every fac- ing what they would. From all these perils God entire church of the Latter Day- tors sought to justify their vio- city for an extensive and pro- delivered us. Every one of Saints. In giving these reasons they- lence by accusing the Saints of per- perous commerce, excited the- the accused were acquitted stated that our religious senti- enormous crimes, and the most jealousy of those who at Mack- Though numerous persons

ments and domestic habits were- inac had for a long time monop- olized the entire Indian and fish- were assaulted and cruelly incongruous with theirs, and that- ing trade. The wretched men of the bor- ders, who had sought a home- beaten, every one recovered

it was necessary for their happi- beyond the haunts of civiliza- tion, that they might indulge in- Only a small portion of the

ness that our brethren should- unrestrained debauchery and en- joy impunity in crime, could only- property which had been leave; and as the

1. M. Wait has returned from his mission, and will be found at his old stand, ready to serve his customers, as usual.

By the first steamer from below he will carry in receipt of an extensive assortment of spring and summer goods, in his usual variety.

He will have the largest and best assortment of ready made clothing ever offered in the fishing region.

MORE GOODS EXPECTED.

In consequence of the great increase of his business, he has sent an associate to New York to select a still larger assortment of goods, which will be received here and State.

the districts, in some of the principal cities, and other establishments, such as, papers, linens, animal, goods, etc., etc. In Person. Price $1.00.

For a full description of the new law of animal husbandry, see Dr. T. P. Price, 15 cents.

Each of these works may be ordered by mail of the first of the publishers, enclosing the amount in bank notes, or stamps, and address all orders to 308 Broadway, New York.

N. B.—Name your Post Office, State.

bookbinder, so can do substantial work, in styles from plain to rich, with constant employment at a place. One of two thousand volumes, and several smaller or will be waiting in a hurry, at the opening of navigation. A gentleman of family, who would settle permanently, would be preferred. Free abstinence from intoxicating drinks, on all occasions, and exceptional moral qualifications would be indispensable.

Three or four boat-builders, able to carry a yard on their own account, could be pressed for work in the early season.

Six or eight journeymen coopers would find constant employment at good prices.

A horse, boat, and ornamental water is early needed here.

Three or four "our" printers, of unusual habits, can have constant employment here, at book and news work, the coming summer.

There is such a lack of qualified school teachers here as to make it really difficult keeping our schools in operation.

A baker and provisioner would find this place a most eligible location.

Who will come here and build a gristmill? There is only one small one here, and that is much the same as none. Numerous handmills are in requisition, for want of other facilities.

If some man would set up a cedar mill and factory, he could sell his productions at his door faster than he could finish them.

A wood dish all would give profitable employment to several hands.

Two men, good workmen at chairs, would get more orders, accompanied with the cash, than they could fill.

One bread maker would be equally fortunate in locating here.

It is difficult to get joiners, that persons have been obliged to build from the vicinity of the work.

A good lumberer could find ready sales for several kilns of brick annually. Brick are now brought from Milwaukee, and cost ten dollars per thousand. But we have good claybanks as there are Milwaukee, and the wood can be had for the chopping.

Three or four brick and stone masons and plasterers would find constant employment, at good prices.

A shoemaker, who can stock himself, and keep custom work for sale, would find the business excellent.

A tanner and currier, who wished to open an old fashioned country tannery, on any capital from two hundred to five thousand dollars, could find this a very desirable location.

A tailor would find constant employment, and prompt pay. If able to keep ready-made clothing he would find home sales for the work of a dozen hands.

Four or five persons qualified to peddle merchandise, can make large profits in small investments. Each would require a boat, costing from $300 to $100, and $50 to begin business on that purpose. But if they do read prophecies, yet did not pre-empt, they can get their wood as cheap as from any other province, but acknowledge a place whatever; and may take advantage of a superior off a large surplus of timber, which would otherwise be logged and burned. For many years, any demand of that kind will be without effect on the supply for steamboats.

For many years no other place can successfully compete with this in the business. There is no other point near here, on the steamboat line, furnishing an abundant stock of standing timber, near an accessible harbour, with a back country to support the men and teams employed in getting the wood.

At the Manitow Islands the timber is badly culled, and the supply nearly exhausted, and to get what little remains new and expensive wharves, have to be constructed in open exposed places, and it is difficult to keep the proprietries of life destroyed, his prospects. One who drinks intoxicating liquors need not un-be kept up at a great expense.

dertake it. Any one who wishes to undertake the business, should be here ready to work by the first of July, as the influx of strangers at the Conference makes that the cream of the season.

NOT WANTED.

The newspapers have been proclaiming for six years past that the people of these Islands are a set of blacklegs, pirates and robbers. In consequence, every now and then some old scamp, grown gray in iniquity, comes along offering credentials of bad character, and asking fellowship with us. We have no use for such, and don't want them. We beg the public not to suspect us of offering this as evidence of our own general good character. We are quite indifferent whether they attribute it to our honesty, or a desire to monopolize all the rogues to those already here.

No man who uses intoxicating liquors need consider himself invited, whatever good qualities he may have. We have had trouble enough with such, and don't wish to try another.

We do not wish to invite men whose intention is to make a fortune, and leave. Of course all can come and go as they like, but we are seeking permanent settlers, who will invest their profits in the development of the resources of this country.

No one need come who imagines for a single moment that the Mormons are one whit behind any body else in intelligence, enterprise, or virtue. We could warrant such a one more homesick in one week than he ever was yet.

WOOD TRADE AT BEAVER ISLAND.

Beaver Island is about 35,000 acres in extent. Of this 12,000 acres, in addition to the 3,000 already cleared, is likely to be cleared during the next ten years, and after reserving such timber as is wanted for building, fencing, and other local improvements, will yield fifty cords of steamboat wood to the acre, equal to 600,000 or 60,000 per year. It is not probable that there will be a market for more than one-third of this amount. The rest is likely to be logged and burned, to get rid of the land. After that period 10,000 acres of timber are sufficient to supply the wants of the inhabitants of the Island. Paul re-baptized twelve men at Ephesus by sprinkling them, and the number they had been immersed after all sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven. John's baptism, (as he supposed) given unto man, save the blasphemy. I remarked in that meeting that my against the holy ghost. This for one I need not wait to go home, sin shall not be forgiven in this world, nor that which is to come.

A forest will renew itself in twenty years. This would add it so often I could repeat it without cutting 500 acres a year, out the book. But I did not assume to a supply of 25,000 cords same to understand it. I was then but a learner, labouring under the very serious difficulty, as to any other purpose, it would be a long time before the de-viz, when after thirty years of demand for steamboat wood extinction under divine professing, ceeded the supply at this Island, each to be sent of God, and after But after 15,000 acres of the learning one important lesson, as best land is cleared, most of the I supposed, along comes another timber on the remaining 20,000 divine, equally authoritative, and is equally adapted to fencing and throws it all away as chaff. Said building purposes, as to fuel, and I to him, how could our children the extensive improvement of learn in this way?

The prairies in Illinois is rapidly creating a demand for it. The great number of railroads concentrating at Chicago required only as it was when the great and talented man of Ethiopia, he had charge of all the treasures of the Queen though he could not, they can get their wood as cheap as from any other province, but acknowledge a place whatever; and may take advantage of a superior off a large surplus of timber, which would otherwise be logged and burned. For many years, any demand of that kind will be without effect on the supply for steamboats.

For many years no other place can successfully compete with this in the business. There is no other point near here, on the steamboat line, furnishing an abundant stock of standing timber, near an accessible harbour, with a back country to support the men and teams employed in getting the wood.

At the Manitow Islands the timber is badly culled, and the supply nearly exhausted, and to get what little remains new and expensive wharves, have to be constructed in open exposed places, and it is difficult to keep the proprietries of life destroyed, his prospects. One who drinks intoxicating liquors need not un-be kept up at a great expense.

be kept up at a great expense.

Grand Traverse is more than of Paul at Ephesus were all dead or externally, exert an influence twenty miles off the route, and works; and as the Methodists once diametrically opposite to the in-attempts to start the business along body because I had been sprinkled liquids.

the shore above here proved at the request of my parents by. Many persons, upon taking a journey in cold wintry weather, although I don't drink very abortive.

In Lake Huron no hard wood hood, asserting that they would if they are given to drinking much, I find that my weekly can be got, except by hauling not dare to do it, lest they should beer, prefer drinking it cold, up-expenses for drinks and cigars from many miles inland, through make light of so sacred an ordi-on the consideration that it will amount to something more than difficult and uninhabitable nance. I conclude there is some thus strengthen their powers of the sum I pay for my board. He marked difference between these endurance. And every one is surprised, but he does not rec-

But at Beaver Island the wood two characters and views. And knows the bracing and exhilarat-ollect that his life is nothing but is of a suprior quality, and very he who cannot discern this much, ing effects produced upon thean intermittent drink. A wall near excellent harbours, directly must need essentially the quick-system by a vigorous plunge of known proprietor opened an up, the steamboat routes of all the euing influence of that spirit which the body into cold water. It town hotel and bar-room the gives an understanding.

Here are five wharves in the In relation to your views of no nerves, favours the exhalation he took in over four hundred dol-business, three of them insur-redemption beyond this present and circulation of the fluids, and lars at the bar alone, and his gross passed for compidiousness, and life, they are nothing new nor un-injurs a free healthy tone and receipts on the entire establish-convenience, with the advantage common, neither are they true at vigour to the whole system. ment for the first week were six-

a safe harbour an abundant all. They are not to be relied. The influence of cold water-teen thousands dollars. Say that supply, steward's stores always upon because they are the popular upon the system internally is out of the four hundred dollars at hand, and a very large pas-theory, neither should they be re-strictly analogous to its influence received at the bar fifty dollars senior and freight business. jected because of long standing externally. Yet this point must were spent in cigars, that leaves expense, because the men to do it truth is the place to try all doc-is of a nature too powerfully So that on the day in question are residents, and have the same time. You say it is your opinion that either internally or externally, by bar amount to what would supply and raise most of the provisions. men go immediately to heaven persons constitutionally weak of the population of a small town

Wood can be got out at less reputation. But the rock of the conceded, that cold water a sum equal to 2,000 drinks.

St. James, Mich., May 27, 56. when they die, or descend into an debilitated, as in such cases it with a drink to every inhabitant.

Corsin Bretex: You may endless hell. Did you ever in is apt to produce flatulence. This love to drink and barthink I have not much else to do, quire where you got this opinion-crap, &c. rooms is every day increasing.

by my writing so often but it is I once had it riveted in my mind. Some of the sisters say, "But Every day sees fresh poison-sa-not so, by any means, I submit so sacredly as to suspect one of I do enjoy a comfortable cup of loons springing up in various rised with business every day the-infidelity who should doubt it. tea when I feel faint and sinking, parts of the city. Every day work may be done. This morn-But facts are stubborn things. It strengthens, refreshes, and en-sees our youth becoming more ing it rains, and your letter is be-When I come in contact with one-livens me so quickly." Yes; and more the victims of this hab-

fore me. of these rocks I look, and look so do some persons enjoy a com-it for really we think it is more

In it you advise me to read I come to a conclusion, and for bear-able warm bath; but both a habit than a passion. It is no

Rev. xxii, 11, previously sub-scrib- ing your own opinion. All right, here weigh so small, I throw them for temporary relief, are enervating. It is not the hot exuberunder the circumstances, perhaps, ty. Now Jesus died, you know, and ted in. And it would be well-essent impulse of the gay young that is, I mean all right that you. he did not go immediately to the sisters to ask themselves fellow who is sowing his wild oats.

gave your opinion. But your con-he did not go immediately to the sisters to ask themselves fellow who is sowing his wild oats.

chisions are quite erroneous. In heaven, nor an endless hell; whether they would feel faint and it is a cold, deliberate, confirmed this age of multifarious opinions, for David prophesied of him, say-sinking" as often as they now de, habit. No atmosphere of reck-every man and woman are per- ing, "Thou wilt not leave ny providing their artificial hot and coldness or jollity surrounds the fectly independent to interpret soul in hell." This one fact is sui-strong drinks were dispensed drinking groups. No peals of the prophecies, notwithstanding silent to overbalance all modern with, and nature left to move nat-arriment alone for the act, at

Peter, who held the keys of the priest-eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph- third day, "I have not yet ascency of scripture is of any private- ded to heaven," and he was seen many days after his resurrection.

interpretation; referring to those before he ascended into heaven.

So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the

But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Peter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priesteracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph- third day, "I have not yet ascen-

cy of scripture is of any private- ded to heaven," and he was seen many days after his resurrection.

interpretation; referring to those before he ascended into heaven.

So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the

But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Peter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest-

eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph- third day, "I have not yet ascen-

cy of scripture is of any private- ded to heaven," and he was seen many days after his resurrection.

interpretation; referring to those before he ascended into heaven.

So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the

But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Peter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest-

eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph- third day, "I have not yet ascen-

cy of scripture is of any private- ded to heaven," and he was seen many days after his resurrection.

interpretation; referring to those before he ascended into heaven.

So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the

But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Peter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest-

eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph-

Now it is not at all an uncom- mon thing to hear a young man in this country, when he is sum- ming up his expenses, say, "By taking a Jove, how money does go! Why, although I don't drink very much, I find that my weekly up-expenses for drinks and cigars amount to something more than the sum I pay for my board. He is surprised, but he does not rec- ognize the fact that his life is nothing but an intermittent drink. A wall of known proprietor opened an up, the steamboat routes of all the euing influence of that spirit which the body into cold water. It town hotel and bar-room the gives an understanding.

Here are five wharves in the In relation to your views of no nerves, favours the exhalation he took in over four hundred dol-

business, three of them insur-redemption beyond this present and circulation of the fluids, and lars at the bar alone, and his gross convenience, with the advantage common, neither are they true at vigour to the whole system. ment for the first week were six-

a safe harbour an abundant all. They are not to be relied. The influence of cold water-teen thousands dollars. Say that supply, steward's stores always upon because they are the popular upon the system internally is out of the four hundred dollars at hand, and a very large pas-theory, neither should they be re-strictly analogous to its influence received at the bar fifty dollars senior and freight business. jected because of long standing externally. Yet this point must were spent in cigars, that leaves

Wood can be got out at less reputation. But the rock of the conceded, that cold water a sum equal to 2,000 drinks.

expense, because the men to do it truth is the place to try all doc-is of a nature too powerfully So that on the day in question are residents, and have the same time. You say it is your opinion that either internally or externally, by bar amount to what would supply and raise most of the provisions. men go immediately to heaven persons constitutionally weak of the population of a small town

St. James, Mich., May 27, 56. when they die, or descend into an debilitated, as in such cases it with a drink to every inhabitant.

Corsin Bretex: You may endless hell. Did you ever in is apt to produce flatulence. This love to drink and barthink I have not much else to do, quire where you got this opinion-crap, &c. rooms is every day increasing.

by my writing so often but it is I once had it riveted in my mind. Some of the sisters say, "But Every day sees fresh poison-sa-

not so, by any means, I submit so sacredly as to suspect one of I do enjoy a comfortable cup of loons springing up in various rised with business every day the-infidelity who should doubt it. tea when I feel faint and sinking, parts of the city. Every day work may be done. This morn-But facts are stubborn things. It strengthens, refreshes, and en-sees our youth becoming more ing it rains, and your letter is be-When I come in contact with one-livens me so quickly." Yes; and more the victims of this hab-

fore me. of these rocks I look, and look so do some persons enjoy a com-it for really we think it is more

In it you advise me to read I come to a conclusion, and for bear-able warm bath; but both a habit than a passion. It is no

Rev. xxii, 11, previously sub-scrib- ing your own opinion. All right, here weigh so small, I throw them for temporary relief, are enervating. It is not the hot exuberunder the circumstances, perhaps, ty. Now Jesus died, you know, and ted in. And it would be well-essent impulse of the gay young that is, I mean all right that you. he did not go immediately to the sisters to ask themselves fellow who is sowing his wild oats.

gave your opinion. But your con-he did not go immediately to the sisters to ask themselves fellow who is sowing his wild oats.

chisions are quite erroneous. In heaven, nor an endless hell; whether they would feel faint and it is a cold, deliberate, confirmed this age of multifarious opinions, for David prophesied of him, say-sinking" as often as they now de, habit. No atmosphere of reck-every man and woman are per- ing, "Thou wilt not leave ny providing their artificial hot and coldness or jollity surrounds the fectly independent to interpret soul in hell." This one fact is sui-strong drinks were dispensed drinking groups. No peals of the prophecies, notwithstanding silent to overbalance all modern with, and nature left to move nat-arriment alone for the act, at

Peter, who held the keys of the priest-eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph- third day, "I have not yet ascen-

cy of scripture is of any private- ded to heaven," and he was seen many days after his resurrection.

interpretation; referring to those before he ascended into heaven.

So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the

But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Peter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest-

eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph- third day, "I have not yet ascen-

cy of scripture is of any private- ded to heaven," and he was seen many days after his resurrection.

interpretation; referring to those before he ascended into heaven.

So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the

But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Peter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest-

eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph- third day, "I have not yet ascen-

cy of scripture is of any private- ded to heaven," and he was seen many days after his resurrection.

interpretation; referring to those before he ascended into heaven.

So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the

But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Peter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest-

eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph- third day, "I have not yet ascen-

cy of scripture is of any private- ded to heaven," and he was seen many days after his resurrection.

interpretation; referring to those before he ascended into heaven.

So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the So your opinion goes down the

But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in But still your text holds good in place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Pe- place, so long as you admit Peter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest- ter, who held the keys of the priest-

eracy. Christ said, oh the ural means for strength.

Kingdom, has said that no proph-

Now it is not at all an uncom- mon thing to hear a young man in this country, when he is sum- ming up his expenses, say, "By taking a Jove, how money does go! Why, although I don't drink very much, I find that my weekly up-expenses for drinks and cigars amount to something more than the sum I pay for my board. He is surprised, but he does not rec- ognize the fact that his life is nothing but an intermittent drink. A wall of known proprietor opened an up, the steamboat routes of all the euing influence of that spirit which the body into cold water. It town hotel and bar-room the gives an understanding.

Here are five wharves in the In relation to your views of no nerves, favours the exhalation he took in over four hundred dol-

business, three of them insur-redemption beyond this present and circulation of the fluids, and lars at the bar alone, and his gross convenience, with the advantage common, neither are they true at vigour to the whole system. ment for the first week were six-

a safe harbour an abundant all. They are not to be relied. The influence of cold water-teen thousands